Editorial

AN EXPORT TAX

The Western Musical Herald contains in its June issue a very fine editorial on the above named subject, a part of which is here appended:

While the Democratic party is tinkering with the tariff it should not overlook a very important item. Every year a considerable number of millions is carried out of this country by foreign artists for which nothing tangible remains. The money made by foreign artists in this country is never spent here. It is quietly and expeditiously transported to Europe, where if its possessor is thrifty, it secures for him a villa where he spends his summers indulgng in much airy persiflage concerning the "Yankee pigs" and planning for his next American tour. These artists should pay an export tax. They should be made to show the amount of their earnings for the season and pay a tax thereon. The government would realize a sum that would he in the nature of a surprise, for few people realize the vast amount of money carried out of the country each year by visiting artists.

Not to bclittle the work of any foreign artist whatsoever and with real gratitude for all that which is really good in their programs we yet must insist, with the editor of Western Musical Herald that if the foreigners should object to such a tax we could very easily supply their places from among the ranks of young American musicians, many hundreds of whom today have no opportunity whatever to come before the public in a large way simply because of the fact that the foreigners keep the field overcrowded continuously.

MISSOURI CONVENTION

The music teachers have just held a very successful meeting and the following items, printed just as they come from the secretary of the association, may furnish some food for thought to other state conventions:

Kansas City, Mo., June 26, 1913.

Following are several items of important business transacted:

1. Examination test for violin for which a certificate of attainment is issued to the successful applicant. Ability to play creditably ten exercises from Kayers Studies, Books II. and III., the Adagio from the Seventh Concerto by Rode, and the Finale from the Ninth Concerto by De Beriot. Ability to play all major and minor scales and arpeggios in three octaves from memory. A knowledge of harmony the same as required by the harmony test for piano, which is as follows: "Intervals, scales, the construction and progression of major, minor and dominant seventh chords and their inversions. The resolution of all dominant sevenths and their inversions." Wort S. Morse, Carl Busch, committee.

2. Moved that the president appoint a committee to stand for two years, whose duty it shall be to circulate a petition throughout the state, which shall be presented to the next state assembly and also to be brought to the attention of the State Superintendent of Instruction Evans, urging them to make the study of music compulsory in all public schools of the state.

3. Resolved, By the Missouri Music Teachers' Association in convention assembled, that competent private study of music under appropriate supervision by the school authorities should be recognized by the public high schools and that credit for such study should be allowed toward graduation.

It was voted to charge one dollar initiation to all new members in addition to the regular dues, $1.

Moved that it is the sense of the meeting that the convention be held in February, 1914, not later than the 15th of the month.

President James T. Quarles, of St. Louis, and Vice President Wort S. Morse, of Kansas City, were re-elected. Alfred G. Hubach, of Kansas City, who held the office of secretary-treasurer, by appointment, was elected to hold that office.

The treasurer reported a balance on hand of $490, an increase of more than $300 over last year.

OUR OWN LINE O'SWIPE

"Have you noticed," said Mr. Bright to the Editor, "that in those schools which advertise 'free scholarships' so strenuously during the summer the pupils awarded these scholarships are generally the ones who play the next spring at commencement? I have thought this matter out rather carefully at home and it has occurred to me that the free scholarships are advertised so extensively merely for the purpose of attracting great throngs of applicants to the schools so advertising and out of these throngs there will be selected only the extremely talented ones for favor. If this be true, and certainly it looks like good business for the school to make it true, then indeed there is only one word with which to characterize the great throng which comes in answer to these ads and is induced (largely) to take a 'partial scholarship' because of the alleged fact that 'the free scholarships are all gone,' not to mention this very rude word outright I will give you a hint by saying that some wise man, once, somewhere, said that one of the species was born 'every minute.'"

One of the numbers on the program at Ravinia Park yesterday was "Thee Bee" (Schubert). Probably in honor of Phoebe B. Beebe of Grand Rapids, who has been made famous in the "real" line.

Music teacher in public school:—"Can any child tell me the meaning of pause?"

Up goes Joe's hand.

"Well Joe?"

"It's what grows on kittens," says Joe.

Why theory teachers go insane: Two "answers" reported recently as having been given in final examinations:—

"A glissando means that you slide across the piano."

"A trill means that you shake the note."

The list of musicians who "never read what the music papers say about them" is a very large one, but—did you ever notice how one of these is affected when one of the papers happens to make a misstatement about him even if it be so small an error as the omission or insertion of a single letter?

This is from the Ravinia Park program in re the Baroness Rottenthal: "The reticulated costume, with the ruffled chiffon adown the back to suggest the dorsal fin, is about as far, perhaps, as the dancer can conscientiously be expected to go and still retain the essential wispiness of the delicate serenade used as an accompaniment."

To our out-of-town readers—Don't forget, when you write to the colleges about "free scholarships" that you must enclose several letters of "recommendation" from your minister, your leading townspeople, etc. This is an essential point.

Music in Chicago

RUBINSTEIN CLUB, AUSTIN

Thursday evening, June 19, the Rubinstein Club of Austin, one of Miss Ida Belle Freeman's many organizations, gave its particular part of the June festival in the way of a "musical banquet." It is a novel idea for a musical festival.

The night was exceedingly warm, but 175 guests sat down at beautifully arranged and inviting tables in the gymnasium of the First Presbyterian Church. At each plate was a hand decorated place card bearing the words "Music is the child of prayer." The decorations were pink, with an abundance of flowers.

A most satisfying and well served dinner put everyone in a good humor for the toasts and music to follow.

Mrs. Nissen, president of the Rubinstein Club, introduced Mr. P. R. Brooke as toastmaster, in the absence of Mr. Dudley Taylor, announced on the program. Mr. Brooke spoke with wit, and his remarks were timely. The following toasts were given, interspersed with music:

"Women in Music," Mrs. W. H. Amerson.

"Music in Our City Life," Alderman I. R. Hazen.

"Women's Musical Clubs," Mrs. Stella Jannotta.

Dr. J. B. Thomas, Dr. P. L. Curtiss and Mr. F. E. Short, president of the Handel Oratorio Society, spoke impromptu at the request of the toastmaster.

Miss Mildred Pillinger sang two songs by Mrs. Carol Kelley Brooke (wife of the toastmaster), the composer at the piano.

Mrs. Anna Greulich sang three Clough-Leighter songs.

Miss Charlotte Hussey gave readings and Miss Pillinger sang "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice" from "Samson and Delilah."

A very interesting talk about Haydn and his "Toy Symphony" was given by Miss Margaret L. Green, preceding a performance of that symphony by the Girls' Glee Club, Miss Freeman conducting. The program closed with the toast "Chords and Discords," Mr. J. E. Northrup.

The honors in the matter of toasts must be accorded the ladies, Mrs. Amerson and Mrs. Jannotta. They were delightful, evidently putting much thought and time on the matter, while the gentlemen probably prepared theirs "between times," as our busy men must do sometimes. However, they were interesting and to the point and expressed a high appreciation for Miss Freeman and her work for the cause of music in the community. The spirit of helpfulness in the way of greater financial support was abroad and urged by the men.

All of the music was furnished by local talent, of which Austin may well be proud.

The "Toy Symphony" was the unique number on the program, and Miss Freeman deserves much commendation for giving the people of Austin an opportunity to hear it. It is fun as well as music, fun for performers as well as for audience. It had to be given without the violins, as those players did not arrive, but on the whole it was amusing, interesting and entertaining.

Miss Lillian Grant gave piano numbers during the banquet and played accompaniments.

The Rubinstein musical banquet was a success. M. K. W.

STEIN STUDIOS

A recital by the piano department, assisted by elocution, voice and violin pupils of the Stein Conservatory, took place in the Auditorium recital hall on Monday, June 23. The piano students were those of Stephen A. Erst, consisting of the intermediate and advanced classes. Their work was thorough in every way, reflecting much credit on the capabilities of Mr. Erst. The numbers were largely from the classical composers and well selected, making the program interesting as well as serving to show the growth of the various students. There were several who appeared as soloists for the first time but who acquitted themselves with credit. There were no flaws or hesitancy at any time, as is usually the case with first appearances, the difficult Allegro Appassionato of Saint-Saens was admirably done by Florence LeClaire, and Hazel Palmer did splendidly in a double number by Liszt and Moszkowski. Anna Weske closed the program in a good style with the Chopin Scherzo, opus 31, and a Concert Etude composed by Mr. Erst, which proved to be a work of first order. Others who played solos were Rose Zilligen, Marion Falkenboch and Tonia Vojan, each of whom received well earned applause. The four-handed numbers were also well received, as were the two violin solos by Millard Lambert and Ignace Vrhel, pupils of George Hrusa. The vocal numbers were done with tone quality and vibrant energy characteristic of Mr. Stein's pupil and were highly applauded. Miss Hazel Rathbun, contralto, and Mr. George Looch, high baritone, sang with ease, taste and skill, and Miss Cora Beier's voice rang true and clear in all the difficult staccato and coloratura passages of a splendid waltz song. A duet sung by Miss Ruth Dably and William Kriml was well done and enjoyed by the audience. The reading of the "One-Legged Goose" by Grace Dably was a delight, as was also that of Marguerite Sheffield, who reads with true interpretation and with spirit.

CHEVALIER N. B. EMANUEL AT WHITE CITY

The White City Band, under the direction of Chevalier N. B. Emanuel of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, is the musical attraction at the fine south side resort for the time being. These players were heard on the evening of June 26 in numbers by Auber, Strauss (of waltz fame), Gounod, Massenet, Meyerbeer and lesser composers. As was to be expected, Chevalier Emanuel, with an organization made up of a number of Chicago's best orchestral and band players, furnished some excellent music. As a leader he is absolutely unassuming and reposeful, but gets the same results as more strenuous directors. We believe that even the most rabid lover of spectacle would commend Mr. Emanuel's methods during the sweltering days of the past week. Then beside the purely instrumental numbers, the band furnished some excellent music for the While City ballet, whose members are recruited from the ballets of the Chicago and Metropolitan opera companies. Madame Phasey is the ballet mistress and the present offerings of the organization are "The Masque Ball" and "Dances of All Nations." The productions are beautifully costumed and finely executed by the corps de ballet.

HENRY PUPIL IN RECITAL

The last recital for this season in the Henry studios was that given by Miss Clara Rubey, one of Mr. Henry's most talented pupils. Miss Rubey played the "Eroica Sonata" by MacDowell, and the second and third movements from the "Concerto in B flat minor" by Tschaikowsky, as well as works by Chopin, Reger, Paul Juon, and an "Intermezzo" and "Prelude" of her own composition. Miss Rubey has made a marked advance in her playing during the past year. Her program was played with splendid style.

STEIN STUDIOS

In spite of the heat, a large audience assembled to hear the commencement exercises of the Stein Conservatory last Wednesday evening, and they were well repaid, for an unusually fine program was given. Songs, readings and violin selections formed the first part of the program, and the second part was the play of "David Garrick." Diplomas in voice and dramatic art were awarded to Harold Taylor, who showed himself well equipped to begin his professional career, both in his singing of a group of songs and his acting of the title role of "David Garrick." Mr. Taylor left June 26 for an extended trip to the western states and Canada as leading tenor in the light opera "Sorority Days." Miss Mabel Griggs also well deserved her diploma, for she sang the long, difficult aria by Donizetti entirely from memory with clear, high tones and with perfect ease in the coloratura parts. Miss Glendora Barnes and Miss Ruth Dably are two contraltos of excellent worth. Miss Barnes sang an aria by Verdi with a voice of great power and beauty and with genuine dramatic force. Miss Dably's charming interpretation of a group of entirely new songs and of different styles was one of the main features of the program. Miss Dora Hurless, in a pathetic reading, fully sustained the reputation gained as an impersonator of first rank. Bess Anderson's sympathetic reading of "Aux Italians" with musical themes from "Il Trovatore" was a pleasing novelty, while Mrs. Nelson was highly expressive and entertaining in her humorous selection. Miss Marguerite Sheffield played the heroine in "David Garrick" with much intelligence and grace. Mr. Houghton as Simon Ingot gave some fine bits of impersonation, as did also Mr. Haislip as the stuttering Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Ariminta and Chivy were all exceedingly well done by Messrs. Sheffield and Looch and Miss Dably and Nettie Hurless. Violin solos by Reva Pierce and Milton Meyer added variety to the program and showed thorough study and preparation.

EDITH ADELAIDE KIEN

The recital which is given at the close of each season by Miss Edith Adelaide Kien and pupils occurred in Willard Hall on the evening of June 27. Every pupil accomplished the task in hand most commendably, showing the results of good instruction, and in each case it was evident that a good technical and musical foundation was being laid. The most significant numbers musically were Weber's "Rondo Brilliante" and a Polonaise, Etude and Ballade by Chopin. The program opened with a demonstration of kindergarten work, Master Roslyn Wright, a bright youngster, illustrating in a convincing way his teacher's methods in this direction. Miss Kien's contributions to the program were Liszt's familiar "Etude in D flat" and the "Danse des Elfes" by Sapellnikoff. Poetic insight and good technical equipment unite in making Miss Kien's interpretations thoroughly enjoyable.

Miss Mary E. Highsmith as assisting artist sang the "Vissi d' Arte" from "Tosca." Her performance was a beautiful piece of vocalism filled with emotional and dramatic fervor. Miss Highsmith is one of Chicago's most enjoyable sopranos, because her voice is fine, likewise her presence, and she knows how to sing. An encore was added to the programmed number.

Edna Reiner Marshall, reader, was genuinely entertaining in a series of impersonations called "At the Photographer's." As the "giggling high school girl" she was almost irresistible, and the laugh she affected was about the most infectious and mirth provoking we have ever heard from the stage.

The names of Miss Kien's pupils who took part are as follows: Marjorie Craft, Mable Schowe, Ebba Pearson, Delphine McNichols, Chauncey Dickinson, Anna Pires, Hans Mueller, Pearl Hedstrom and Ruby Montgomery.

KATHRYN L. WILLIAMS

The last of a series of three piano recitals which have been given by pupils of Kathryn L. Williams occurred at her studio in the Mallers building on the evening of June 25. On this occasion Miss Julie Bulkley was the pianiste, who presented a program which included numbers from Schuett's "Carneval Mignon," Henselt's "Were I a Bird," a "Romance" by Gruenfeld, and a "Perpetual Motion" by MacDowell. The recital was a success and Miss Williams is to be congratulated upon the good teaching she has done, as manifested in the work of her pupil. Assisting with the program was Miss Maxine Davis, reader, a pupil of May Donnally Kelso, who gave a scene from Shakespeare's "King John."

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY

The final concert of the season was given by advanced pupils of the Metropolitan Conservatory of Music in Kimball Hall on the evening of June 24. As violin numbers, a portion of Lalo's "Symphony Espagnole" and the "Pibroch Suite" by MacKenzie were excellently presented by Miss Nita Samuels and Miss Irene Stolofsky, respectively. Miss Frances Szulczewski gave a creditable performance of Chopin's "G Minor Ballade," while Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasie" was played with some brilliancy and verve by Miss Mary McMillan. Miss Irene Johnson, soprano, gave an aria from "Trovatore," displaying a voice of good possibilities, which in its present stage of development shows results of good training. Mr. Frederic T. Blum, baritone, sang a number from Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers." It was given with fine round tone, good style and interpretative intelligence. Both singers are pupils of Mr. Leroy Wetzel, a director of the Metropolitan Conservatory. All accompaniments were played by an orchestra, Mr. Wetzel directing for the vocal numbers and Mr. Harry Dimond for the instrumental. Viewed from the pupil standpoint, the concert was of a high order throughout.

KURT WANIECK AND HANS HESS

The first program in a series of Saturday morning recitals that will be given in Kimball Hall in connection with the summer school of the American Conservatory was presented by Kurt Wanieck and Hans Hess last week. So far as the presentment of the program was concerned, it was almost ideal, the only blemish, a very slight one, being a rhythmic unsteadiness in a few bars of the last movement of the Strauss sonata for piano and 'cello. Otherwise, we have never listened to a more satisfying performance even by those whose names are blazoned in big black letters across three columns of the music journals. But for the physical environment on this occasion so much cannot be favorably said. The heat was oppressive, artists and audience mopping their faces, especially strenuously at the close of a movement or number. But, worst of all, to supplement the click of a score of typewriters in offices adjoining the hall, there was continual commotion in the vicinity of nearby elevators, and to cap the climax some plumber began to beat a tatoo on an iron pipe, but happily the latter was silenced before he had time to commence variations on his theme. These annoyances are mentioned because the artists are to be doubly congratulated on such fine performances under unusually trying conditions. Mr. Wanieck is one of the elect among Chicago pianists, or we might enlarge and say American pianists. Seldom does one hear so beautiful an interpretation of Beethoven's works as that accorded his Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3. Technical proficiency is something one need not emphasize as belonging to Mr. Wanieck, for without it such fine and poetic pianism as his could not exist. Beautiful tone in every sort of passage, a delightful rhythmic sense, nuance, individuality and polish are the qualities that lend distinction to this young pianist's playing. An organ "Choral Prelude" by Busoni-Bach and the Busoni-Beethoven "Ecossaisen" were also given with nobility and authority. Mr. Hans Hess is a 'cellist whose work one may always anticipate with pleasure. He draws a beautiful tone, possesses great technical dexterity, and infuses his interpretations with fervor and imagination. On this occasion Bruch's "Kol Nidrei" was interpreted with great dignity and a fine depth of feeling. And in direct contrast a "Spanish Dance" by Popper was tossed off with exhilarating abandon. And let it be recorded that Mr. Hess was assisted by an accompanist of unusual ability. Miss Marie Bergersen is quite a young woman, but her piano playing manifests qualities that spring from a richly endowed musical nature. As a soloist she is always interesting; as an accompanist she should hold her own with any. The program closed with a performance of Strauss' "F Major Sonata" for piano and 'cello. The ensemble was satisfying to the last degree, save in the instance cited at the beginning of this article.

"LAWN FETE MUSICALE"

A most delightful summer musicale was given at the home of Mrs. F. N. Mathews, 5638 Indiana avenue, Tuesday evening, June 24, 1913, by the following artists: Clarence Eidam, pianist; Miss Maude Lewis, soprano; Mr. Frederick Kadow, reader, and Miss May Laukart, accompanist; all of the Cosmopolitan School of Music, Mr. Eidam and Miss Laukart being members of the faculty, while Miss Lewis is a pupil of Dr. Williams, and Mr. Kadow a pupil of Mr. William Owen of the dramatic department.

Mr. Eidam is so well known to lovers of real piano playing that comment seems unnecessary; however, it must be stated that the weather conditions were not of the best, and that to command the attention of a summer gathering at best is not an easy undertaking. Therefore the reception accorded Mr. Eidam speaks volumes in itself. In his interpretation of the "Valse A Flat" by Chopin, and the "Octave Etude" by Sauer, he displayed a faultless technic and such richness of tone and breadth of style that he completely charmed his audience.

Miss Lewis, a young soprano of much promise, sang songs by MacDermid, Cowen, Spross, in a way which reflected much credit upon her teacher, Dr. Williams. She has a gracious personality which will doubtless aid her materially in her rise in the profession. Miss Laukart, in her accompaniments showed without a doubt that were she to make a specialty of accompanying, it would be but a short time before she would take a prominent place among the best in the field, for she is at all times in perfect sympathy with the singer, and while her piano part has body, it does not cover the voice.

Mr. Kadow appeared in a number of character sketches and showed to fine advantage the careful and praiseworthy training he has had under Mr. Owen.

M. A. MONZEL MUSICAL COLLEGE

The commencement concert of the M. A. Monzel Musical College took place at Whitney Opera House on Wednesday evening, and as always, was attended by a capacity audience and, as matter of fact, several hundred people who wished to purchase tickets were sent empty away because of the fact that every seat in the house was occupied long before the beginning of the program.

Miss Monzel has a great clientele for her school and these friends come to commencement full to bursting with enthusiasm and with their arms piled up with flowers for the members of the various classes. A unique plan has been evolved in this school whereby much trouble and dissatisfaction is avoided and instead of delivering the flowers after the individual performances, they are all piled on the stage as they arrive, and so on Wednesday night by 9 o'clock the Whitney stage looked like a floral storm had struck it, and there were piles and drifts of flowers everywhere.

This and the cool appearance of the young ladies who performed and Miss Monzel's calm dominance of the whole situation saved the audience from being swept away with the heat, for the Whitney, always hot in summer, was on this occasion a veritable furnace.

In spite of this the scores of performers went through their allotted tasks with great steadiness and in most cases considerable aplomb and the enthusiasm of the audience was at a point of fever heat corresponding to the temperature of the room.

Miss Monzel has departments of piano, violin and voice from which to draw performers for her concerts, but she has long since evolved an ensemble scheme which is certainly attractive and which is also most surely an advantageous one for her pupils. Very few solo numbers are given at the commencement concert, but relays of two, four and eight pianists appear simultaneously and with four, six or eight hands at two pianos, and an accompaniment from the school orchestra, they evolve music which is always accurate and which, because of its adaptability to the general public, is also always received with greatest delight.

Such numbers were played on Wednesday by Florence Raithal, Anna Casey, Frances Stermer, Caroline Wall, Anna Willms, Rose Nayder, Loretta Lane, Anna Thomas, Mathilde Eaton, John Withers, Joseph Nayder, Clement Dobski, John Joch, James Rejsek, Ellen Anderson, Emelie Pelletier, Jeanette Render, Anna Ruby, Grace Higgie, Anna Flanagan, Anna Fitzgerald, Rosalynde Keane, Marie Fett, Hazel Carlson, Corinne La Fond, Esther Anderson, Mary Anderson, Lillian Brown, Mabel McNamara, Ellen O'Brien, Marion McCurrie, Mary Hughes, Anna Prieb, Georgie Vickery, Rose Diver, Denise Larrivee, Maizie Kelly, Ella Eggert and Hilda Erickson; the members of the orchestra being Ida Jackson, Lizzie Wolff, Jean Ovens, Catherine Monzel, J. Kuhnle, O. Seig, E. Kimpton, F. Lantry, W. M. Cook, P. Walter, H. A. Haines, T. Price, B. N. Severance, D. Pollock, M. H. Thacker, R. E. Trullinger, E. Feser, P. R. Carr, G. A. Norton, and C. E. Gilbert.

Miss Monzel conducted the orchestra, which played excellent accompaniments, being exact in tone and rhythm and responding to suggestions for shading very readily and the numerous pianists, without exception, played with much credit to themselves and to the school.

Mr. Lewis Waggoner, a pupil who has been with the school for a long time and who has played successfully on various occasions, was heard at this concert in the Second "Rhapsodie" by Liszt, and disclosed a nice sense of rhythm and much facility in shading as well as a fleet finger technic.

Miss Frances O'Neill, a very small girl, played a little piece by La Fontaine very prettily. Miss Mazie Kelly gave an elaborate "Arabesque" on well known airs, and Miss Elizabeth Daniels played a difficult Ballads were sung to the great delight of the audience by Mr. V. Roe, Esther Peterson, Master Le Roy Bessler and Miss May Norton, accompanied by May Heffernan, Ella Eggert, Hilda Erickson and Lewis Waggoner and Miss Jean Ovens and Mr. Waggoner were heard in a "Concert Fantasie" for violin and piano.

The "class selection" was well played by Miss May Heffernan, accompanied by the orchestra.

With such a great list of students on the program it is impossible to specialize on the various performances, but it is only just to say that every number was carried through with precision and surety, and that very much of expressiveness was also manifested in the work of the majority of the players as well as musicianship in that of the accompanists.

Decorations, degrees, medals, diplomas and certificates were given to large numbers of pupils and Miss Monzel may congratulate herself again on the possession of a most faithful clientele and of a class of students who certainly work with a will to carry out her elaborate plans.

MR. BOHLIN'S PUPILS

Mr. J. P. Bohlin of the Willett School of Singing in Kimball Hall, presented Miss Mabel Toepelt, Miss Lillian Toepelt and Miss Augusta Freiwald in a program of songs on Thursday evening at Kimball Hall.

Miss Mabel Toepelt has a clear lyric soprano and Miss Lillian a very pure and rich contralto. Each of them sang solos with much beauty of vocalism and clear understanding. Miss Freiwald has a very true soprano voice with great coloratura possibilities. These three young ladies have only been studying a short time and Thursday evening was in every sense a debut performance, but they may be congratulated on possessing poise and style, and Mr. Bohlin may well be proud of the fact that their work, so far as it has progressed, is marked by great purity and perfect ease. The program follows:

COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF MUSIC

On Friday afternoon the first of a series of summer concerts was given at the Columbia School of Music in the Ohio Building, when Miss Marie Moll and Miss Esther Rich played some good piano numbers in fine style. Master Sol Nemkowsky pleased in a violin group, and songs were given by Mrs. Louise Smith and Mrs. George Gordon Beck.

Mrs. Beck is teaching during the summer as a substitute for Mr. George Nelson Holt. She has a clear soprano voice of excellent quality and her interpretative work in the flower songs was charming. The program in detail was as follows:

MRS. SCOFIELD'S CLASS CONCERT

Mrs. W. C. Scofield occupies a unique position in the list of vocal teachers of Chicago, being the direct descendant, musically, of the late Sig. Marescalchi, whose assistant she was for five years.

Her class therefore is a very advanced one and the knowledge of the operatic repertoire displayed by them is remarkable.

Mrs. Scofield very evidently knows much else to teach than opera. for her programs include selections of all kinds and in all this work the singing is invariably agreeable and always touched also with impressiveness in the way of interpretation.

The closing concert of the season attracted many auditors to Kimball Hall on last Thursday evening, and these remained in the great heat to the end of the long program, applauding each number in the most enthusiastic way.

It is not possible or desirable to detail the work by numbers, but no one could resent the singling out for special mention of Miss Julia Flavillo, a contralto whose solo number was fine; Miss Lillian Malatesta, a young soprano with phenomenal range and power, and the three Camerons, Charles, Archibald and Edward, who certainly are the possessors of fine voices and splendid style.

The singing of the "Rigoletto" Quartet was a piece of work which would have done credit to the most seasoned professionals. The program in full was as follows:

From Opera "Attila," trio.....Verdi
Mrs. W. C. Scofield, Mr. Henry Kluge, Mr. Louis Kluge

HINSHAW CONSERVATORY

Pupils of Misses Matilda and Mary Lewin of the Hinshaw Conservatory, assisted by students from the dramatic department of the same school, gave a recital in Kimball Hall on the evening of June 25. Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" and Kontski's "Awakening of the Lion" were given for two pianos, eight hands. Also an arrangement of "Martha," Brahms' "Hungarian Dance" No. 2, and a "March Triomphale" by Garia were given for two pianos, four hands.

The writer did not arrive on the scene of action in time to hear any of the foregoing numbers. Of piano solos there was a portion of Weber's Concerto, Op. 79, played by Miss Ruth Fischer; one movement of Mendelssohn's Opus 25, played by Miss Anna Phillips; two movements of the Concerto, Op. 31, by Godard, given by Miss Fannie Segal; Moszkowski's "E Major Waltz" given by Miss Elsie Greenspahn, and the Mendelssohn "Capriccio Brilliante," played by Miss Lillian H. Cherno. All piano work was of good quality and there was every evidence that the technical foundation had been well built. Miss Lena Lewin sang Mrs. Beach's "Ecstasy" and Arditi's "Parla" waltz. Evidently she was a great favorite with her audience, judging from the applause she received before and after her performance.

"Giuseppina," a sketch and a comedy, "My Lord in Livery," were given by pupils of the dramatic department, and quite well done they were, too. This department of

SEE AMERICA

This is the title of an historical and geographical treatise on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which may be had at the ticket offices and which, in interesting detail, is equaled by "Glimpses from the Observatory End," another neat little booklet which may be had for the asking.

The foreword in the former reads as follows:

"It has been truthfully said, the railway is foremost in education, and America leads the world in railway achievement.

"The Baltimore & Ohio was the first railroad in America, and therefore has a most interesting tale to relate of an educational character.

"The story, perhaps, may be old to some, but it is new to the generations who have taken up the books their fathers have laid down.

"The leading historical and geographical facts have been carefully compiled and are presented in as condensed form as possible, in the following pages."

Organists going to Ocean Grove this summer for the convention of the National Association there in August could not do better than to go via the picturesque Baltimore & Ohio, as the very best of railroad luxuries are provided for the comfort of travelers on this famous old line. (Advertisement.)

GERTRUDE V. O'HANLON NOTES

Gertrude V. O'Hanlon has received word from Manager Russell in Paris that if they decide to give a series of Sunday concerts this year in Boston they will use Edna Gunnar Peterson as soloist.

Miss O'Hanlon has sold her quartet in Sioux Falls, Iowa; also Edna Gunnar Peterson for a recital at All Saints' School.

Miss O'Hanlon has just placed a course with a music club at Brainord, Minn. Those who will appear at the series are, the Beethoven Trio, Rose Lutiger Gannon and Edna Gunnar Peterson.

EDWARD CLARKE

Edward Clarke, the baritone, after putting in a very successful season in teaching and concert work, left Chicago June 27 for an extended chautauqua tour through the East. Mr. Clarke will return in time to resume his classes at the American Conservatory early in September.

OUR PICTURE

The picture, "A Console of Organists," which is to be found on this page. was taken at Ocean Grove last summer, and a close examination will show many familiar faces.

The convention, which is to be held this year from August 4 to 9, is attracting widespread attention and promises to be the most interesting in the series held at the famous New Jersey resort—Ocean Grove.

The following material and information has been furnished by our Ocean Grove correspondent:

Fred I. White. Reading, Mass.

Edwin B. Hedges, Westfield, Mass.

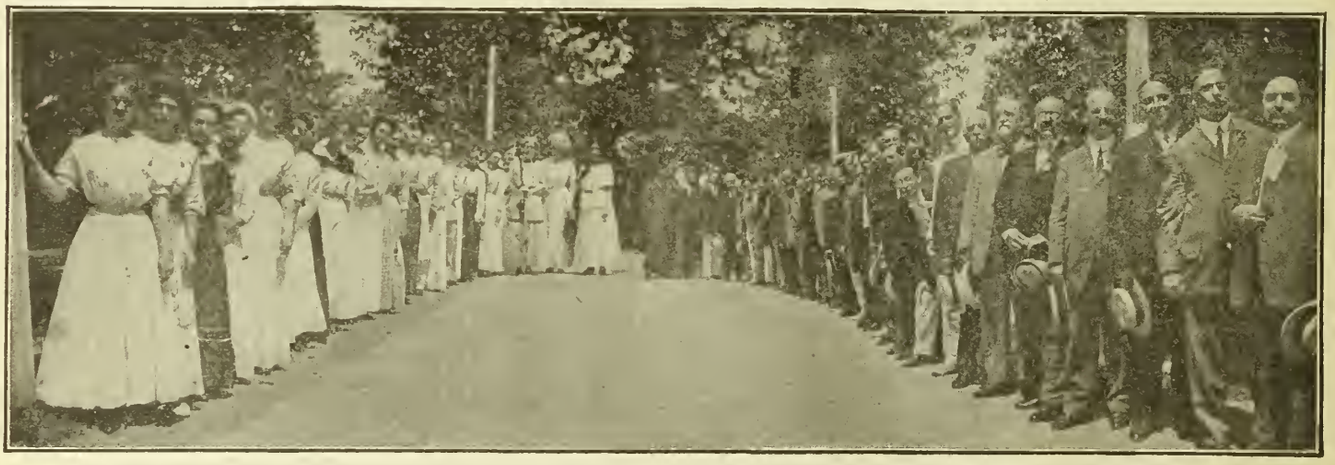
Kinetic Engineering Company, Philadelphia.

The Gem Piano Pedal Board Company, Syracuse, N. Y.

Several other firms have the matter under consideration, and, without a doubt, this exhibit will be the largest ever held in this country. Demonstrations will be given every day by the representatives of these firms under the personal direction of Mr. Scott Brook.

gan for the entire summer. She will sing at most of the popular concerts.

Among the other prominent artists engaged for these concerts are Alice Louise Mertens, one of the finest contraltos of New York; Edith Hallett Frank, a charming soprano; Percy Hemus, one of the most successful of the Victor record singers; the Weber Male Quartet of New York, Donald Chalmers, Jeannette Fernandez, Anna Ballard Lewis, Arthur Parker and many more to be announced. Though these so-called popular concerts are given for very low prices, the standard will be of the highest.



CONSOLE OF ORGANISTS .

The National Convention of Organists

A Great Display of Organ Keydesks, Wind Chests, Stop-Actions, Pipes, Blowers, to Be Shown by the Various Builders.

Mr. Arthur Scott Brook, who has charge of the organ exhibit to be given at the convention of the National Association of Organists at Ocean Grove August 4 to 9, reports that practically all the leading organ builders in the country will be represented. Among those who have already reserved spaces are the:

Austin Organ Company, Hartford, Conn.

Skinner Organ Company, Boston, Mass.

Moller Organ Company, Hagerstown, Md.

Hutchings Organ Company, Boston, Mass.

Steere Organ Company, Springfield, Mass.

Hook & Hastings Company, Kendal Green, Mass.

Wirsching Organ Company, Salem, Ohio.

Estey Organ Company, Brattleborough, Vermont.

The Ocean Grove "Storm"

The Ocean Grove Storm is to be more realistic this year than ever. Oswald Pfeil, the expert German organ builder, is now at work installing a great thunder drum in the organ, which will add considerably to the terrors of the thunder storm. Electrician Walter Franklin is at work putting in wires for additional lightning effects, and it is expected that when the storm is given for the first time, next Saturday night, there will be a number of additional "thrills" in the piece. Clarence Reynolds, the Ocean Grove organist, will arrive on Thursday morning, and he promises some decidedly new and attractive selections in his summer programs.

Mae Sutton, the well known New York soprano who made such a favorable impression in her singing of the popular songs at the Easter music festival at Asbury Park, has been engaged by Mr. Mor-

Singers at Ocean Grove

Tali Esen Morgan has secured for Ocean Grove the Welsh prize singers of Wales, sixty men, the very finest in the principality, who landed in this country on Friday, June 27, and appeared at Ocean Grove on Saturday night, June 28. The choir is known as the "Rhondda Valley Male Prize Singers" and are sent by Wales to enter the international singing contest to be held in Pittsburgh on July 3. The conductor is Professor John Phillips, whose choir of male voices won the national prize at the Llanelly Eisteddfod two years ago. Among the party are found several of the national prize soloists, including Edgar Thomas, a tenor of national fame, and Ivor Jenkins, another of the prize winning tenors.

Mr. Morgan made every effort to secure the party for July, but found it impossible. Most of the singers will return to Wales immediately after the Pittsburgh contest.

Notes

At the regular meeting of the national committee of the N. A. O., held last Tuesday night, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, that the secretary be instructed to extend an invitation to the American Guild of Organists to attend the sixth annual convention of the National Association of Organists at Ocean Grove, N. J., August 4 to 9, and that the guild officers be respectfully requested to select some one of their members to read a paper there on the 'American Guild of Organists: Its Plan and Purposes.'"

The organ builders will send the N. A. O. convention at Ocean Grove at least six organ consoles of the most modern type. The general exhibit will be the largest ever seen in this country and will be well worth going thousands of miles to see. The entire program of the convention will be a most brilliant one in every respect.

Tali Esen Morgan has been mailing requests to the organists of the city to send singers familiar with the "Messiah" to assist the chorus which will sing the work at the organists' convention, August 9, at Ocean Grove. The rehearsals are being held every Tuesday night in the Church of the Strangers, Fifty-seventh street and Eighth avenue. The chorus is limited to 400 voices. Over 300 are already enrolled. The Ocean Grove branch of the chorus will number fully 300.

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERT

The First of the series of summer night concerts at Warren Avenue Congregational Church will be given Thursday evening, July 11, with the following soloists: Alice Ione Cramer, soprano; Elena Moneak, violin; Grant Kimbell, tenor; Electa Austin, piano, and Phelps Cowan, accompanist.

A WEEK OF CONVENTIONS

By MILTON B. GRIFFITH

OHIO

Why will folks have music teachers' conventions during the hottest week of the season? Also why do not the music teachers themselves in large numbers realize the great benefit to be derived from assembling and exchanging ideas? Understanding beforehand that Ohio was one of the most enthusiastic of the states in reference to these events, your correspondent journeyed to Columbus, arriving early on Tuesday morning at the Great Southern hotel, which was to be the headquarters, for the concerts and discussions as well as living quarters, but found that the chief clerk was not even aware that there was to be a convention, which was to begin at 2:30. But along about 10 o'clock Colonel William H. Dana, who made the great musical institute which bears his name at Warren, hove in sight. He had plenty of time to tell his life history and how it all happened and several things on the side before anyone else showed up. Then, after the opening address by President Davis and we were ready for the first concert, the program announced "a recital by teachers" it was found there was no piano. Oh yes, the piano was to have been there, etc. The telephone said that the piano was on the way. About two hours later, after other urgings and a few cuss words were in evidence, a real piano tried its best to make an entrance to the hotel, but could not make it to the banquet hall, where an improvised stage had been built upon the tops of several dining tables, carpeted with rugs. Consequently it had to be retaken to storage and await the morning when it was finally brought up the passenger elevator, and the real convention was under way. Until then the afternoon affair had to be postponed—never was given, and the evening recital by Mr. Francis J. Sadlier, bass, of Cleveland, assisted by Miss Bertha May Smith, pianist, of Fremont, and Lynn B. Dana, of Warren, accompanist, was given with a player-piano upon which to play the accompaniments and accommodate a soloist with a Beethoven Sonata!

CHARLES E. DAVIS

This recital was a real treat. Mr. Sadlier possesses a brilliant voice, classed as a bass and having the depth and quality and fullness expected, he sings with utmost ease and control up through the range ordinarily accorded a baritone. His training and subsequent experience in the artist concert field have given him the assurance that his art deserves. Of the vocal efforts of the convention this was one of the best. The program as seen below, embraced the best in vocal literature. Although the hall was stifling with the heat, he bravely carried the program through to the end and the small audience did its utmost to voice its approval. Miss Smith, who should have played during the afternoon, contributed for her first number the first movement of the Beethoven Sonata, Op. 27, No. 1. She is a pretty, demure and unassuming girl who has studied well and surprised the audience with a positive and delicate handling of her instrument. The

Wednesday

On Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock the round table for public school music supervisors was opened with a fine paper by Mr. B. F. Stuber, chairman of Warren Institute. This developed quite a discussion as to the steps necessary of procedure to make the examination of music supervisors more stringent and adequate to determine the fitness of such teachers. Many instances were cited showing the woeful lack of care in these examinations and how easy it is for any one who sings a little and takes a sudden desire to become a music supervisor, "because it paid better than clerking, or millinery, or a hundred other things," and who has a little pull with some one on the school board, to get such a position. Of course not all positions were thusly filled, but far too many. This conference was followed by a talk on "The Rudiments of Music" by William H. Dana, who made practical tests by asking the audience many definitions of the simplest things in musical nomenclature, then giving in crisp, short and terse sentences his definitions, gathered from years of practical experience in the theory class room. It was not quite agreed whether or not Mr. Dana made great progress on new ideas in regard to teaching the rudiments, but he showed clearly that there existed the greatest lack of fundamental knowledge and that the good old-fashioned methods that were thorough were the best. Questions from the audience as to the methods pursued at the Dana Institute, elucidated from him something of their plan of daily class work.

At 1 o'clock Professor Charles M. Jacobus, Dean of the Ohio Wesleyan School of Music, Delaware, led the piano section in a round table. Aside from an interesting talk by Professor Jacobus, two interesting papers were read, one by Miss Isabel Thomas, instructor in Ohio Wesleyan School of Music, on "What Literature Is Best for Study and what Technical Works Are Best Adapted for the Playing of Modern Piano Compositions." The other paper was by Miss Emma Ebeling, pianist, of Columbus, on the necessity for a change in technical equipment for modern piano compositions and a new treatise of harmony. Miss Farrar, who was on program for a paper, was not present.

The 2 o'clock session consisted of a lecture recital by Robert Brain, of Cincinnati, the subject being "The making of a great pianist." The lecture was a review of the technical works necessary, and a number of composers who should be studied to bring out a well grounded pianist. He was ably assisted by his son, Robert Brain, Jr., who, for a lad of scarce seventeen years has developed a remarkable technic and played with great facility a large program of compositions illustrating his father's lecture. As Robert Brain was his son's only instructor to date, he ably demonstrated his ability in the "Making." However, the son seemed to have sunk his entire identity into that of his father and played without any apparent individuality. He has promise of being heard from as a concert pianist if he now determines to pursue his studies with another great teacher, who should develop in the lad the ideals which would lead to more individuality. The illustrations included studies and an etude from "Czerny," Bach, "Prelude and Fugue;" Beethoven, "Moonlight Sonata;" MacDowell, "Improvisation" and "Perpetual Motion;" Chopin, "Two Etudes;" Moszkowski, "Concerto in E Major," first movement, and Liszt, Transcription of the "Tannhauser" March.

HARRY R. MURRISON

At 3 o'clock Wednesday, the round table for vocalists and teachers of voice was conducted by Milton B. Griffiths, of the South Bend, Ind., Conservatory in the absence of Mr. Harry Murrison, who was on the program as chairman. The leader dwelt in his remarks upon the necessity for a good knowledge of the rudiments and a well-developed sense of rhythm as a foundation to begin vocal study. The essentials of breath-control, freedom of the vocal apparatus, proper placement, and correct enunciation of vowels and consonants were treated in succession by the leader ably assisted by Mr. Stuber and Professor Jacobus.

ist Church an organ recital was given by Mr. J. Lawrence Erb, F. A. G. O., director of the Conservatory of Music, University of Wooster, Ohio. Under most adverse conditions Mr. Erb demonstrated his profound musicianship both as a master in command of his instrument and of able interpretative powers unsurpassed. The instrument upon which he played was a small, two-manual organ, of excellent tone, but most unresponsive in action, and the wind supply was so bad that in the midst of the Guilmant Grand Chorus the performer had to stop until it caught its breath. For this reason two big movements of Rene Becker's First Sonata in G minor had to be omitted and the Largo from Dvorak's New World Symphony was substituted. Considering the handicaps of a bad instrument and a small audience, the recital was a complete success. The most enjoyed numbers were De la Tombelle's "Echo," a simple but colorful little bit which won the audience completely, the Bach D minor Toccata, the Rogers Berceuse and the Guilmant Grand Chorus.

Following is the complete program:

Toccata and Fugue in D minor.....Bach
Minuet in G (arranged by Rogers).....Beethoven
Echo, Op. 23, No. 2.....De la Tombelle
Allegretto in B minor ..... Guilmant
Berceuse in A.....Rogers
Grand Chorus in D.....Guilmant
Pastorale in F sharp minor.....Faulkes
Romance in D flat .....Lemare
Preludium Festivum
Prayer
Toccata
First Sonata in G minor.....Becker

Thursday

On Thursday morning a most interesting paper was read by Mr. Erb on "Organ Playing and Its Relation to the Church," which involved the following points:

The Preparation of the Church Organist.
His Training and Equipment.
His Relation to the Church and Its Services.
His Duty Toward the Congregation and the Community Which He Serves.
How Can the Ohio State Music Teachers' Association Be of Service in This Important Field?

In this, several points were most instructive to ambitious organists. Two of which brought general commendation from the audience were the proneness of many organists as well as other musicians to always be worrying "how much" there was in it for any bit of playing, that it was their duty as well as any other citizen of the community to give freely of their esrvices when the logic of the occasion demanded; rather to be over-zealous in the performance of duty than question every detail in its relation to dollars and cents. The other point dwelt upon was the lack of understanding between ministers and the directors of the church music, often resulting from absence in most cases of musical training on the part of the minister.

At 1 o'clock the "Recital from Schools" postponed from the previous morning was given. It enlisted the services of Miss Helen Ewing, and Miss Catherine Seeley, from Wooster University, both pupils of Mr. Erb. Miss Ewing played with splendid technical equipment and facility, the Liszt Gondoliera No. 1, and Chopin Etude in C sharp minor. Miss Seeley with equal effectiveness played the "Bird Sermon" of Liszt and the Brahms Andante and Scherzo from Sonata, Op. 1. These pupils speak volumes for the efficient training given them by Mr. Erb. In the absence of his sister Miss Martha Dana, Lynn B. Dana occupied her place on the program, but the writer did not learn the numbers played, having momentarily left the hall. However, upon return, he was bowing acknowledgments to very enthusiastic applause, hence this popular young man evidently did something worth while. The "Faust" waltz by Liszt was most ably done by Miss Ruth Slayback, from the Women's College at Oxford. Some splendid work was done on this program by two vocal pupils of Mr. Herbert Edmund Hutchinson, director of Mount Union-Scio College Conservatory of Music of Alliance. They were Miss Pauline Andreas and Miss Austa Speck. Miss Andreas, a girl of seventeen, who had studied but one year, displayed a clear, powerful soprano voice in the "Ernani" aria, "Ernani, Ernani, Involami," the clearness of the runs and other coloratura work incidental to this aria being handled with astonishing accuracy for one so young. She comes from a musical family and will doubtless be heard from. Miss Austa Speck sang "Charmant Oiseau" from David's "Le Perle du Bresil," with flute obligato. This young lady has a voice from which she often obtains dazzling effects. She is endowed with an organ which is especially well developed in the higher registers, where she obtains peculiarly thrilling effects in climaxes. In her aria it was unnecessary for her to use the device of changing the ending, which is often employed even by reputable concert singers, but she took her high E with assurance and made a stunning climax on the high D in the closing phrase. Her interpretations are musicianly throughout and her work at the convention and elsewhere has evidenced the fact that she is ready to take her place among the really talented singers of the concert platform.

AUSTA BELLE SPECK

Some of the visitors who were unacquainted with the conservatory from which these young singers hail were surprised at the remarkable degree of vocal efficiency to which their teacher had brought them. Mr. Hutchinson has a rare faculty for developing a real legato style and musicianship in the singers he trains and the ones heard at the convention bear testimony that his methods are not only reliable and effective but are also more productive of really artistic results than are found in most institutions.

Following the school recital Mr. Harry Murrison, bass-baritone, assisted by his wife, Mabel F. Murrison, gave a joint recital, both acquitting themselves in very good style and receiving the plaudits of the delegates in unstinted approval. Mr. Murrison possesses vocal powers in amplitude for any desired purpose and gave this very representative program with much care. Particularly were the dramatic effects of his program well brought out. Following was the program given:

Aria, Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves (Scipio).... Handel
Rhapsodie Hongroise No. 6 ..... Liszt
Mrs. Murrison
Lungi dal caro bene (16th Century)..... Specchi

At the 3 o'clock meeting Thursday afternoon Dr. Charles H. Mills of the University of Illinois was expected to be present and deliver an address on the standardization of music teaching, but he did not arrive until Friday morning. Mr. Herbert Edmund Hutchinson, director of Mount Union-Scio College Conservatory, presented his report as chairman of the committee on standardization. He reported that a few of the State Music Teachers Associations had taken definite action upon the question of granting certificates to worthy teachers. He said that in general there are two theories in regard to these licenses, the minimum and the maximum. In the former, the standard is to be set for the smaller qualification for a teacher to begin work with. In the latter, the idea is to set up so high a standard that the very best teachers and those best qualified to begin such work shall find in such a certificate a sufficient testimonial of highest attainment. The New York Association recently adopted the minimum plan, while the Minnesota teachers declared for a triple standard.

MABEL F. MURRISON

HERBERT EDMUND HUTCHINSON

He pointed out that the profession of music teaching had to do with the expenditure directly or indirectly of $600,000,000 annually, and therefore presented a great economic problem, since this expenditure is more than that annually spent on the army and navy, and is equal to the annual postal receipts. This means that without doubt state regulation must come sooner or later.

He suggested that although the matter was not one for the convention to act upon, since it is really out of its jurisdiction, probably the thing that can be done most quickly toward setting a definite standard in music would be a concerted action in regard to courses of study and diplomas issued by the conservatories connected with colleges belonging to the state association of colleges. Since this association is already formed and is one of the strongest in educational circles it would be comparatively easy for this matter to be taken up.

He also pointed out that since the Ohio Music Teachers Association is not incorporated, the first step would be to secure such incorporation and in such manner as would empower it to grant certificates and diplomas of recognized merit. This was incorporated in the report and officially adopted.

He further called attention to the extremely rudimentary examinations given to public school music teachers and the inefficient manner in which these examinations are administered. The examiners are the regular county examiners who do not profess to have, as a body, any knowledge of music. Therefore they must use the general standing of the candidate as their greatest guarantee. In many cases these examinations are not given in the regular way at all, on account of the consciousness of their inability on the part of the examiners. This could be easily remedied by calling in special examiners. There was a strong protest against the custom of preparing for public school music teaching by the mere attendance upon a summer school of music lasting from ten days to six weeks. The examination should be given in such a way as to compel a much wider knowledge of musical subjects in general. The convention adopted a resolution accepting this part of the report and ordering that a petition be circulated among the leading musicians of the various counties of the state and submitted to the state school commissioner asking that these defects be remedied so far as the present laws of the state allow.

In the general business session which followed on Thursday afternoon, much interesting discussion developed. First, the lack of interest by the many teachers of the state not present, the apparent apathy of the profession in the principal city, Columbus, the way of remedying some of the many evils of the public school examinations, etc. It was unanimously decided to incorporate the association in order to be better able to bring about some much needed reforms and the passing of the resolution mentioned above.

President, Lynn B. Dana, Warren.

First vice president, J. C. Ringwald, leaving other vice presidents to be appointed.

Secretary-treasurer, Julia Eatwell, Warren.

Program committee chairman, Herbert E. Hutchinson, Alliance.

Two principal offices are seen therefore to be filled by "live wires," the president-elect is one of those wiry untiring kind, ambitious, with high ideals who will not be content to see a few scattering representatives attend such important business but, having the utmost goodwill and acquaintance of the profession at large, will be able to instill much needed new life into the association. He has back of him also the big following of the Dana Institute. The other most important official is the program chairman which is seen to be placed in splendid hands in Mr. Hutchinson. Also with high ideals, one of the busiest men in the state, but always the busy man is to be depended upon to do things and still find time to help materially in putting this prominent state back into the limelight of activity along association lines. Mr. Hutchinson possesses that likable personality which appeals and whose requests are respected and complied with. The Ohio Association now bids fair to recover from the "slough of despond."

Indiana

Arriving on Friday morning at Marion your correspondent struck an entirely different atmosphere, it was still boiling hot, but in other ways the air was charged with very desirable activity and the convention hall, the spacious recital hall of the Marion Conservatory of Music, was alive with a look of prosperity, differing much from the results of the last convention at Elkhart. This association has taken on much new life and almost miraculously escaped what seemed the disaster of the Elkhart meeting. This was due to some radical departures made in the policy of the association. As one day's doings had already transpired, the Marion Leader-Tribune will be called upon to furnish the data for that day's events. It is as follows:

"President James M. Black, of Washington, Ind., in his annual address before the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association, which opened for two days' session at the Marion Conservatory of Music Thursday morning, furnished subject matter for action for the members of the association.

"He recommended some departures from the former way of conducting the affairs of the association, to better serve modern needs in the affairs of music in the state. It seems probable that some of the suggestions of President Black will be acted on favorably by the convention, whose delegates seem to be alive to the situation and to be desirous of doing the very best thing for the association.

"Mr. Black said in his message to the music teachers:

"In this, the thirty-sixth annual convention of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association, I think we have arrived at a period in its history that there should be some radical changes in the general trend of the association, if we expect the association to move forward with the progress of the times and fulfill its mission as an organization for the awakening of a deeper and broader interest in musical culture in Indiana. For a number of years the musical festival idea has been the predominating feature of our annual meetings and has been very successful in most instances.

"But of late years many of the cities of the state have their May festivals and concerts of a high order, that to a limited extent takes the place of our meetings, besides some of the orchestral organizations and chautauquas which have developed within the past few years, are also crowding in on the ground our association has formerly filled. Therefore in view of the progress and continually changing musical conditions of the state, there should be some change in our methods of work in the association to meet the growing conditions.

Recommendations Made

"In the first place, I would recommend there should be more stress laid upon the educational side of music in the way of lectures on different musical subjects, by lecturers who are recognized authorities in their line; conferences by musicians and teachers in the different lines of our profession, and also a limited number of fine concerts. Next I would recommend that our meeting be only a two days' meeting instead of the longer period as in the past and that the date should come earlier in the season for the meeting.

"I also recommend that there should be several changes in the general conduct of the affairs of the association. First, that there should be a large committee or board of managers, composed of delegates and life members who shall have charge of all the important affairs of the association. I would also recommend that there would be a large delegate membership secured from over the state, who, to hold membership, should pay their dues of $1.50 annually, whether they attend meetings or not. This would give officials a fund to work from that would aid in the work of the association very much.

"I certainly thank the association for the honor it has bestowed upon me in holding its highest official position and also for the many courtesies extended to me, and I shall always feel a deep interest in the welfare of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association and hope the association may still retain its place as one of the best organizations of its kind in the country.

motion prevailed that it be received and a committee on the president's address was named with other committees. The following were the committee nominations which were ratified by the convention:

"Nominating committee—J. B. Metz, Huntington; Matthew Lundquist, Marion; Helen Clark, Wabash; Mrs. D. D. Mitchell, Martinsville, and Mrs. Myra Gordon. Logansport.

"Memorial committee on death of J. S. Bergen, former secretary—W. E. M. Browne, Newcastle; Clark Leaming, Hammond, and W. H. Mershon, Marion.

"Resolutions committee—H. C. Gast, Seymour; Miss Agnes Smith, Kokomo, and Miss Ada Wright, Marion.

"It was ascertained that forty delegates were in attendance at the opening session, which was regarded as large as were ever in attendance at any convention at the opening session. It was announced also that the financial success of the concerts was assured and that there would be no deficit in the matter of holding concerts this year.

"Percy L. Nussbaum, chairman of the program committee, reported on the work of that committee, explaining why there was a delay in preparing the program. J. S. Bergen, the former secretary, having died in February and no successor being named until recently.

"The secretary's report of the last annual convention, held in Elkhart, was read by Secretary W. E. M. Browne, who was unable to supply many of the inserts, which are still among the papers of the former secretary. L. M. Tilson of Connersville, treasurer, was given more time in which to complete his report. Mr. Fischer, chairman of the executive committee, was not present at the opening session.

Consulted Greathouse

"W. E. M. Browne, chairman of the public school commission, reported that the committee had had a very successful conference with Charles A. Greathouse, state superintendent of public instruction, with the result that questions asked music teachers on examination are now more consistent. It was explained that formerly questions bearing no relation to fundamental instruction in music in the schools were asked on examination.

"Announcement was made by Mr. Nussbaum of the program committee that Mr. Shideler, whose name appeared on the program to give an address of welcome, was called out of town unexpectedly and that the Rev. J. F. Porter of the First Methodist Church would give the address of welcome. The local committee in charge of the reception to follow the evening concert was announced at the morning session, as follows: Mrs. W. H. Charles, Mrs. Thad Butler and Mrs. H. L. Cushwa of the Lyric Club; Miss Ada Wright, Miss Alice Goldthwaite and Miss Elizabeth Hogin of the Morning Musical Club; and Mrs. John Pitt Stack, Mrs. A. T. Davis and Mrs. W. H. Mitchell of the Art Musical Society.

New Constitution

"At the afternoon session the committee on the president's address recommended that a committee of three be appointed to draft a new constitution along lines suggested, to be submitted at the next annual meeting of the association; that a committee of twelve directors or managers be appointed who should meet occasionally and keep in touch with affairs of the organization, to recommend any needed changes in the affairs of the association, these committeemen to be named from life members and delegates, that an earlier date for the annual meeting be selected.

"All propositions submitted by the committee were discussed by the convention which resolved itself into a committee of the whole. There was favorable comment in the main on all propositions, but those members of the association who are supervisors of music in the public schools objected to the convention being held in May for that is the month they are busy with commencement music in the schools. They said they would favor a meeting date in early June or even in April, but not in May.

"All the propositions advanced were turned over to a new committee to be presented at a business session of the convention today.

School Music

"Professor Robert Foresman of Chicago addressed the convention yesterday afternoon on 'Public School Music' and his address pleased the supervisors of music in public schools. He argued for the subject, of easier method of instructing pupils of the third and fourth grades in music, as opposed to the objective method which some musicians, he said, are much wrapped up in. Mr. Foresman interspersed his address with selections at the piano to illustrate what he meant by simple harmony, rhythm and movement which the young child can be led to take up readily without effort. It was the assertion of Mr. Foresman that musical problems in America would be solved through the public schools. Mr. Foresman spoke readily and entertainingly and the music teachers were pleased with his address.

"Round table discussions on piano and public school music completed the afternoon program.

Evening Concert

"The first concert of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association at the First Christian church last evening was a brilliant success. The artists were of the very best and their numbers were well chosen so that the combination was one which pleased the audience. The intense heat was such that all concerned were at a disadvantage and the auditorium of the church was not taxed for seating capacity. The majority of those in the audience were musical people, including many delegates and officers, while the general public was fairly well represented.

"Owing to the fact that G. A. H. Shideler was called away on business, it was impossible for him to deliver the address of welcome in behalf of the citizens of Marion, and the duty fell upon the shoulders of the Rev. J. F. Porter, pastor of the First M. E. Church. He congratulated the music teachers on the success of their invitation, welcomed them because they were happy, good looking and well to do, and assured them that the city of Marion was at their disposal during their stay. His remarks were of the most pleasant variety and when he had finished there was no doubt in the minds of the visitors as to the heartiness of his welcome. The response on behalf of the music teachers of the state was gracefully presented by President J. M. Browne of Washington.

"Mr. and Mrs. Frederiksen of Chicago made their initial bow to a Marion audience and their work was of a very high order. Mr. Frederiksen is a violinist of wonderful ability and his wife as an accompanist is almost letter perfect. The combination was one that is difficult to beat, and at the close of each number they received liberal applause. Mr. Frederiksen appeared in three series of numbers throughout the program. His first, Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and violin, by Emil Sjogen, in allegro, andantino and presto movements, was a bit of wonderful execution. His second endeavor was Concerto No. 4 with a variation of movements which served to show his wide range of capabilities. The third of his series was a Hungarian dance by Brahms.

Eidam Scores

"One of the really big men of the program was the pianist, Eidam. His work on a concert grand piano was a marvel to everyone and it is a safe assertion that his superior has never been heard in this city, not excepting Jeanette Durno, who appeared at the Indiana last winter with the Philharmonic Orchestra under the direction of Emile Bouillet of this city. Mr. Eidam is a success as a pianist for the simple reason that his ability is natural and not acquired. He proved this time and again and throughout the evening he appeared at perfect ease. His part in the program opened with a Rhapsodie in F sharp minor. While it was beautiful, it did not serve to show the ability of the artist to the best advantage, so that it remained for him to execute the magnificent Octave Etude which showed him to be the pianist he really is. Upon his second appearance Mr. Eidam played three Chopin numbers, a Valse in A flat, Nocturne in F minor, and a Polonaise in A flat. In the final number Mr. Eidam displayed rare execution and technic, and it is probable this last effort was the greatest of the series. A description of this selection would be most difficult. Mr. Ediam played with the temperament of the true artist. Under the rapid-fire execution of his wonderful fingers the audience was repeatedly carried from thunderbolts to rippling zephyrs while the selection ended in a fortissimo that was particularly brilliant.

Ovation for Hess

"Hans Hess, the Chicago 'cellist, won a great ovation, and if the amount of applause accorded him may be safely regarded a criterion he scored one of the greatest successes of the event. His pleasant manner and his technic quickly won for him a place in the hearts of the audience and throughout his entire appearance his work was sufficient to justify the high esteem in which he was held. peared in two a, b and c numbers. Probably his most delightful selection was the Spanish dance 'Vito' by Popper, in which he was called upon for his most rapid and artistic work.

"The majority of the program, as will be noted by the foregoing, was devoted to instrumentalists, with but a single vocalist, yet if a popular vote were taken it is more than likely this same vocalist would be pronounced one of the most delightful entertainers of the convention.

Mrs. Zendt

"Mrs. Marie Sidenius-Zendt of Chicago, a soprano singer, more than held her own with the coteries of instrumental artists, and to the layman if not to the professional musician, her work proved a delightful and refreshing treat. Mrs. Zendt is a lovely woman of much personal charm, and above all a voice that is wonderfully clear and resonant. Her enunciation was perfect and she possesses that intense volume which enables her voice to be heard in every portion of the hall. Her first numbers were arias from the opera 'Louise' by Charpentier, and all of them were beautifully rendered. In her second appearance Mrs. Zendt gave a variety of classics, closing with the well known 'Will o' the Wisp' by Spross. This selection served well to display her lightness of manner, her vivacity, and her wonderful range. But to describe so perfect a thing as her art is like attempting to trace the pencil lines in a delicate water color, and suffice it to say that she is a real artist, the equal if not the superior of most of her contemporaries.

"Program—M. B. Griffith, South Bend; Blanch Bartley, Oaktown; Miss Agnes L. Smith, Kokomo.

Public schools—W. E. Moore, Flora; Harry C. Gast, Seymour; A. W. Mason, Columbus.

"Percy L. Nussbaum of the Marion Conservatory of Music, and chairman of the program committee, was chosen the new president of the Indiana Music Teachers' Association, to serve during the year 1913-14, on the recommendation of the committee on nominations this afternoon. The final business session was productive of much to interest the general public, and in a series of resolutions from the pen of H. C. Gast, the various Marion institutions that contributed to the success of the convention were generously thanked, including the pulpit, the press, the directors of the First Christian Church, the Marion Conservatory, etc.

"The business meeting Friday morning at the conservatory was attended by a splendid delegation, and Secretary W. E. M. Browne, who has been a member of the organization for the past twenty-five years, stated he could not recall a convention in which the attendance on the part of delegates has been so satisfactory. The auditorium was comfortably filled, and the greatest interest was shown in the deliberations. One of the most pleasing numbers on the morning program was the address on 'The Training of a Singer,' by D. A. Clippinger of Chicago. His remarks were founded on facts, and to say that he delighted his audience is putting it mildly. Mrs. Carrie B. Adams of Terre Haute, scheduled to appear before the teachers Thursday, failed to arrive on time, and her address on 'Choirs, Choristers and Congregations' was presented Friday morning. Her entire effort was a plea for the legitimate in the conduct of church music, and she described the many freak musical stunts of churches in order to attract crowds. Mrs. Adams declared that a preacher who depends on the musical merit of his choir to win his crowds is not going to be favored with audiences for a long time.

Mme. Ryder Talks

"On account of the non-arrival of Max Leckner of Chicago, the round table discussion which was to have been conducted by him was dropped, and Mrs. Theodore Sturkow Ryder, a pianiste of Chicago, gave a talk on the necessity of memorizing a certain amount of music by pupils, and the importance of their knowing something of the subject of harmony.

"The afternoon session was devoted principally to the reports of committees and a few addresses by professional musicians. Resolutions on the death of the late J. B. Bergen of Lafayette, for twelve years secretary of the Music Teachers' Association, were passed by a unanimous vote. Mr. Bergen died a few months ago, and the fact that he had been in the service for so many years rendered his loss the more unfortunate. A number of very tender sentiments were expressed in the resolutions. The lectures Friday afternoon were by Leon Sametini of Chicago on the violin, and Carl Morris of New York on voice culture.

"One of the most important communications presented to the convention was the following report of the committee on the president's address.

Committee Recommendations

"Among the recommendations of the committee, based on suggestions by President Black in his address, are the following: That the educational side of the convention be featured rather than the festival, but not to the exclusion of the latter; that the annual sessions cover a period not to exceed two days and two nights instead of four days; that the meetings be held not later than Thursday and Friday of the third week in June; that the board of directors consist of twelve persons who have been active members for at least two years, the board to be appointed by the president at the close of the convention, and that the association elect no one to office who is not in attendance at the convention. It was also recommended that in view of the rapid growth of the association in the past few years, a committee of three persons who have been members at least three years be appointed by the president to draft a new constitution."

Besides the officers named above, the following were named by retiring president, Black, as the board of directors for the coming year:

J. M. Black, Washington.
G. W. McCutchan, Greencastle.
M. B. Griffith, South Bend.
J. B. Metz, Huntington.
H. C. Gast, Seymour.
Mr. McIlvaine, Vincennes.
L. M. Tilson, Connersville.
W. E. Moore, Flora.
George Eckert, Kokomo.
Mrs. D. D. Mitchell, Martinsville.
Mrs. E. Louise Williams, Moores Hill.
Mrs. Myra Gordon, Logansport.

On Friday evening was given at the First Christian Church one of the best concerts in the history of the association by Leon Sametini, Chicago, violin; Carl Morris, New York, baritone; Theodora Sturkow Ryder, Chicago, piano; Mrs. George E. Eckert, Indianapolis, soprano.

At the Piano—
Miss Marie Edwards, Chicago; Mrs. D. D. Mitchell, Martinsville

Throughout this long program an audience which well filled the large church, sat and sweltered but thoroughly enjoyed every number of it. Mr. Sametini was a great favorite. Although it was agreed there would be no encores, the audience so insisted after his concerto that after several recalls he finally responded. He plays like only a great artist can play, technically faultless, with absolute command of the powers of his splendid instrument and with a bigness of musical interpretation that places him easily one of the first violinists of the day.

Madame Eckert is delightful to the best advantage in the aria from "Eli." She does some remarkable dramatic work with a quite lyric soprano voice. She knows just the effect she wants and accomplishes it most easily. Her work throughout was a delight.

Equally attractive was the baritone of Mr. Carl Morris, of New York. He has gained in interpretative powers. His voice, great in its powerful utterances, is capable of the most delicate modulation which he handles with rare ease. At times he is tempted to let his magnificent equipment sing with too much tone.

Mme. Ryder was at her best and gave some rarely beautiful readings. She is one of those sure-fingered artists who may always be depended upon to "deliver the goods." Lacking in nothing in the matter of technic or strength or delicacy of shading, her artistic interpretations will live long in the minds of those who were fortunate enough to hear her.

Marie Edwards, the accompanist par excellence, played Mr. Sametini's accompaniments. They were grace and precision personified. Mrs. D. D. Mitchell was the very efficient accompanist for Mr. Morris and Mr. Eckert accompanied perfectly the interpretations of Mrs. Eckert.

Altogether the convention was a notable success, financially and programatically, and marked a new epoch for Indiana. There is talk of next year's meeting going to Martinsville or Greencastle.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

Music News, instead of finding that a "dull season" is at hand, is simply swamped this week with matters requiring attention.

On account of the great space given in this issue to the very important and very fruitful conventions in Ohio and Indiana last week, we are compelled to omit from our columns very interesting letters from Denver, Worcester, Keokuk and Cedar Falls, as well as our report of the Saengerfest at Syracuse and a review of a Festival Song Service at Wheaton last Sunday evening. All this matter will, however, be used in the next issue.

Buckmeyer.—Mr. E. Francis Buckmeyer, whose picture apears in the review of the Ohio convention, in this issue of Music News, is president of the first County Association to be organized in the state. He was the organizer of this association; George Dickinson of Oberlin is vice president; Miss Delia Porter, secretary, and Miss Nettie M. Dunn is treasurer.

THEODORE S. BERGEY

A teacher who has made a great success with his work in Chicago and who is known throughout the country as well as in Europe, is Mr. Theodore S. Bergey, who maintains the Bergey Chicago Opera School at 430 Fine Arts Building, where his fine suite of rooms is continually filled with students of voice who have come to him no less because he specializes in opera than through the fact that his reputation as a voice builder is an extremely fine one.

In all his work Mr. Bergey is very materially assisted by Mrs. Bergey, who is a pianist of distinction and as a coach and accompanist has no superior in Chicago.

It has been the custom of Mr. and Mrs. Bergey to spend their summers in Europe, but this year they are making an exception in favor of the large class of Americans who wish to study with them, and so their Fine Arts studio will remain open throughout the summer.

In the fall Mr. and Mrs. Bergey will present an opera with their pupils and it may confidently be expected that this will be a notable function as the work of these teachers is so well known that a thoroughly attractive list of students is sure to be in the cast and the presentment will be one marked by authority and finish.

CHRISTINE MILLER CAPTIVATES BIRMINGHAM

Christine Miller's first appearance in Birmingham, Ala., brought to this popular young contralto a great ovation when she appeared as soloist with the Cincinnati Orchestra at the festival concerts on May 5 and 6. The following notices are from the press of that city:

Miss Miller met with a most cordial reception. Her rich voice is admirably trained. She has fine dramatic style and beautiful stage presence, and she is an artist through and through. It was generally remarked that the management was fortunate indeed in securing so great an artist.—The Age Herald, May 6, 1913.

The night program included two numbers by Miss Miller, the brilliant contralto. She was cordially received Monday night and last night she made even a grander impression. She sang Liszt's "Die Lorelei" and the "Lia Recitative and Aria" from Debussy's "L'enfant Prodigue." For an encore she gave the Page's song from "Huguenots." Miss Miller has not only a beautiful voice and perfect vocalization, but she has as well intellectual grasp and poetic feeling. Her style is operatic, but she is entirely free from footlight mannerisms. She is fair to look upon and gracious in manner and few vocal celebrities have won their way into the hearts of Birmingham so thoroughly as she. The Age Herald, May 7, 1913.

Miss Christine Miller, the vocal soloist, received a most cordial greeting. Coming to Birmingham a stranger, she won the admiration of her hearers by her beautiful personality first and afterward by her art. Miss Miller's voice is a contralto of rich, appealing quality, and she has it under perfect control. After her second number, she was forced to respond to the insistence of the audience. Her encore was "In the Time of Roses," which proved her to be a "ballad" artist as well as a dramatic star. —The Birmingham Ledger, May 6, 1913.

Miss Christine Miller repeated her triumph of Monday night and her exquisite contralto fully met the demands of Liszt's "Die Lorelei," and Debussy's recitative and aria "L'Enfant Prodigue." As an encore she gave the Page's song from "The Huguenots." Miss Miller is one of the most generally popular soloists who has ever appeared on the Birmingham stage. Beautiful in face and form, gracious in manner, and perfectly unaffected, she commands the instant respect of her audience. Added to these qualities is a well-trained voice and intellectual interpretation of music so that there is success written for her in capital letters.—The Birmingham Ledger, May 7, 1913.

"A co-star with Mrs. Aldrich was Miss Christine Miller, who, with the possible exception of two well-known operatic figures, possesses the richest and most resilient contralto in America. And Miss Miller has more than mere voice. Her tone production and vocalization are flawless, and I have the word of a well-known linguist when I say that her articulation was just as good. And, better than all this, she has understanding. Miss Miller's first number was from the category of that polished and elegant Frenchman, Camille Saint-Saens, and though not so familiar as another number from "Samson and Delilah," provoked immediate enthusiasm in listeners. But her second number, the more tuneful "O Don Fatale," from Verdi's "Don Carlos," made an even greater impression with the result that she was forced to respond to an encore. She then sang "In the Time of Roses."—The Birmingham News, May 6, 1913.

The soloist for the night performance was Christine

Miller, who again scored a triumph. Her reception was even more cordial than on Monday night. Miss Miller is undoubtedly one of the foremost artists of America, possessing a voice of richest timbre and a perfect manner of tone production, as well as a pleasing stage manner.—The Birmingham News, May 7, 1913.

GUY BEVIER WILLIAMS' SUCCESSFUL RECITAL IN BERLIN

Guy B. Williams, the American composer-pianist, gave a brilliant recital before a critical audience of the German metropolis at Bechstein Hall, Berlin, on March 18. The following criticisms appeared in the Continental Times and the Berliner Volkerzeitung:

In his concert at Bechstein-saal last Tuesday evening, Guy Bevier Williams not only proved himself a pianist of uncommon ablity, but as was shown in his own Sonata, Op. 5 for piano and violin (in the playing of which, by the way, the composer was admirably assisted by that sterling violinist, Hugo Kortschak), a composer who has something to say, as well.

Good musical ideas, masterfully developed, follow one another in rapid succession throughout the various movements of this grateful work. It is an intensely lyrical expression in which the composer shows himself in touch with the well-springs of melody, poetry and imagination, and comes somewhat as a refreshing draft upon the heels of the many uninspired, disconnected modern utterances which are systematically doled out by unhappy gropers.

The movement which is apt to catch the fancy most upon a first hearing, is the original and piquant Scherzo in which humor is very cleverly depicted. In ending the work Mr. Williams evidently chose to leave the listener in a calm collected mood instead of one resulting from the more customary bombastic finale.

In the structure of the succeeding group of songs which were ably interpreted by the wife of the composer, Bessie Williams, the same agreeable harmonic flow and inventive ability were noticeable. The hearty reception given "Ein Lied" was deserved, the composer having in his setting established an atmosphere thoroughly expressive of the mood of the text. "Rosen" and "Elderbloom and Bobolink" likewise proved to be songs of great merit.

The first and last part of the program presented Mr. Williams in the capacity of pianist. In his opening number, Bach "Chromatische Fantasie und Fuge" he was able to display more than ordinary technical power and facility as well as deep musical understanding.

This was perhaps even more evident in his playing of Schumann's Etudes symphoniques which gave him an opportunity to prove himself equal in every way to the great demands made upon the intelligence, the musicianship and the technical equipment of a pianist by such a colossal work.—Continental Times.

From Guy Bevier Williams I received favorable impressions. His flowing, sparkling technic, the noble tone give tokens of an excellent schooling.

Always within the bounds in strength as well as in temperament, he everywhere remains true to the artistic, enthuses and holds his audience by his earnestness and great pianistic ability. With his playing of Bach's "Chromatic Fantasie and Fugue" and the Symphonic Etudes of Schumann, the modest young artist won for himself a great honor-success.—Volkszeitung. (Advertisement.)

OPENING OF RAVINIA

The opening night at Ravinia was far more auspicious as to weather, this year, than usual, for the heat of last Saturday had been such all day as to incline people to make the effort to go to Ravinia in the hope that coolness might be found there in combination with the excellent program of music which had been prepared by Frederick Stock and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

It was certainly much more pleasant under the trees at Ravinia than it was down town, and the program, musically, was found to be all that had been expected.

The dancing of the Baroness Irmgard von Rottenthal was not so good as some others that might be mentioned, but it furnished an agreeable diversion for those who must have "relief" from the stringency of an orchestra program—even of the summer variety.

There was an enormous attendance—every seat in the pavillion was filled and thousands of people heard the program also from the benches under the trees or wandering about among the pleasant by-ways at Ravinia. The park never looked more beautiful and Mr. Lourie is to be congratulated again on his taste in landscape gardening and the thoroughness with which he has carried it forward at Ravinia.

The program opened with the Dvorak "Carnival"—certainly a cheerful piece for summer night assimilation, and a few moments of real musical solidity were furnished in the "Andante" from the Tschaikowsky "Symphony No. 5," which followed.

The "Polonaise" in E Major, which had been heard under the fingers of dozens of struggling young pianists recently, attained a clarity and a speed under the orchestral proficiency which were electrifying and very promptly swept away the memories of the angularities heard in the less finished performances as well as providing a living model for such young pianists as may have been present.

As a "request" following this, there was given a glittering performance of the 'Ride of Valkyries" (Wagner), which was a great credit to the orchestra as well as to those who had requested.

The Baroness came upon the scene after this number and the orchestra, under baton of her own conductor, assisted her in holding more or less rapt attention through a program which was partly hackneyed, and partly very dull, but which, nevertheless, provided some moments of grace, both in the music and in the gyrations of the dancing Baroness.

After the intermission, during which time the refectory was crowded and many impromptu receptions were held in all parts of the grounds, the program was resumed with the Massenet "Under the Trees," which is calmly cool and absolutely correct for this sort of concert, and was concluded with the MacDowell "Suite" in A Minor, a work of the utmost significance, and which at this concert undoubtedly held the place of honor in the minds of all who heard it.

During the week a succession of fine programs have been given, and today and tomorrow bring these lists:

IN BRIEFER FORM

Freeman.—Miss Ida Belle Freeman presented her vocal class in a very successful song recital at the First Baptist Church of Austin last Saturday afternoon. Those taking part were Miss Esther Erickson, Miss Bessie Bradish, Mrs. R. F. Thompson, Miss Mildred Pillinger, Miss Carolyn Pearson, Miss Marcella Long, Miss Eva Allen, Miss Alma Reed, Miss Nettie Nissen and Mrs. Anna Breining Greulich.

Lincoln.—The University School of Music at Lincoln, Neb., has issued—through its class of this year, the first number of "Passing Tones," a class publication which it is expected will be perpetuated through the years to come by succeeding classes of the school. This first issue is a very handsome and entertaining piece of work and is a distinct credit to all who were concerned in its preparation and publication.

Thaviu.—Thaviu, who has completed a very successful engagement with his band at the White City, has just left Chicago for a ten weeks' Chautauqua trip which will be followed by state fair engagements at Wichita, Kan., and in Louisiana, after which he gives a season of opera at the new theater at Fort Smith, Ark. The Thaviu company consists of the band, a ballet and sixteen principal singers, the chorus being recruited in each city where opera is given.

Cowan.—Mr. Phelps Cowan anounces the "Holy City" to be given at Emanuel Episcopal Church in La Grange on next Tuesday evening. The soloists will be Mrs. Orpha Kendall Holstman, Mrs. Zoe Pearl Park, Mr. Grant Kimbell and Dr. William Carver Williams.

American Conservatory.—Miss Edna Cookingham, pianist, and Mr. Charles La Berge, baritone, will give a recital at Kimball Hall, Saturday morning, July 5th, at 11 o'clock, under the auspices of the American Conservatory.

Liebling.—Miss Helen Calhoun of Sheboygan, Wis., pupil of Miss Claudia McPheeters, was the winner of the Liebling medal this year at the Milwaukee-Downer College. The contest piece was the entire "Sonata," Op. 35, by Chopin.

Mount Pleasant.—At the Central State Normal School at Mount Pleasant, Mich, pupils' concerts were given on June 13 and 18, and the commencement program of June 23 introduced the normal orchestra as well as many fine soloists.

Haight.—Miss Irma Haight, who taught during the past season at Waterloo, Ia., made a very successful appearance at the Iowa State Teachers' convention at Cedar Falls. She will spend the summer at her home in Detroit.

Shaw.—Handel's "Samson" was given at the Masonic Temple of Portland, Ore., on last Monday evening, under the direction of Clement B. Shaw of Chicago and Portland.

Murdock.—Miss Effie Murdock is spending the summer at Petoskey, Mich.

LOS ANGELES

There has been a continuous run of local musical events in keeping with the season's closing of the musical schools, as well as the high schools of the city and the grammar grades. Much of merit in grade and rendition is worthy of mention, as also the aspiring and promising students who have done their graduation demonstration.

The De Chauvenet Conservatory of Music gave a program of interest and their certificated pupils acquitted themselves creditably. Each department had its genius in embryo.

Mrs. Florence Walker gave, in honor of Miss Hilda Nolte, a pianist of excellent attainment, who will soon leavc for a tour in Germany as soloist and accompanist to Mme. Alberta Janson, a dramatic soprano, who also on this occasion sang to the great pleasure of her critical audience.

At the colonial evening of the Los Angeles Fellowship, a newly organized ladies' quartet made its first prominent public appearance. The Del Mar Ladies' Quartet is composed of Mrs. Merlin Belle McKee, Miss Ethel V. Erda Ellmore, Miss Ruby Dale and Miss Louise Marie Bilters, in order of low to high in vocal register. For the limited time in practice their work commends a continuation.

Mrs. George Birkel gave a reception in honor of the Dominant Club to Mrs. Ellen Beach Yaw-Goldthwaite.

Mme. Emma Thursby and Miss Yvonne de Treville were guests of note at the morning luncheon in the home at Laurel Canyon, Hollywood, Cal.

There is in training a chorus of 1,000 voices preparing some good choruses to be used in the national meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E. which will convene here July 9 to 14, when 35,000 delegates are expected to be in attendance, and song will be an element of much interest in all their sessions. Mr. Foster of Washington, D. C.. will be the principal director, with many local and attending delegate leaders.

The thirtieth year commencement of the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music and Arts, Mrs. Adeltha V. Carter, president, and Jaroslaw de Zielinski, director, presented an excellent program. Miss Lillian Rita Mohr, Miss Alma Herberger, Mathilda Minkin, as pianists, show strong artistic training and merit their diplomas which, with Mr. Zielinski's approval, means much. The same is equally true of Miss Mercedes Ciesielska's mezzo-soprano vocal work. "The Lotus Trio" sang well and were highly entertaining, Miss Bilters and Miss Ellmore being the other voices, Mr. De Zielinski playing second piano on the concertos and the accompaniments to the vocal numbers, adding that artistic touch so important to soloists. PARIS LETTER

By MAY MANSFIELD
27 Rue Boislevent

Notice.—Owing to the unfortunate loss of the May letter, the articles covered by that letter will appear in the next issue. The subjects were: Thuel Burnham's May recitals, including that of his pupil, Miss Kroeger. Mr. Hugh Goodwin's latest composition, the "Last Judgment;" Charles W. Clark's recital, opening of Miss Bessie Salmon's vocal studio in Boston, Mr. Alfred Baehren's pupils' recital, Mrs. Eleanor Hazzard-Peocock London recital, Mme. Faniatte's pupils' matinee, etc., etc.

One of the most brilliant seasons that Paris has ever known is drawing to a close. To attempt to enumerate the many attractions is impossible, a daily paper, Comedio, a weekly Guide de Concert, and a bi-monthly magazine, Le Monde Musicale, are overworked in chronicling the mass of matter. But all this goes to show that Paris is one of the best places in the world to enjoy musical and dramatic productions.

The Grand Opera and Opera Comique have had unusually brilliant productions, and the new opera theater Champs Elysees has been the headquarters of epoch making productions. The Russian season is now on. Russian opera with the great Chaliapine leading the stars has been given, "Boris Godounow, and "La Khovanchina," alternating with about sixteen representatives of the Russian ballet, with Nijinski and Karsavina at the head. The new creations of this season were "Le Sacre du Printemps," by Stravinsky, which has aroused such an outburst of enthusiasm and animosity, but which really is one of the most beautiful and interesting works of art that have ever been produced as a ballet; "Jeux," music by Debussy, "Daphnis and Chloe," "La Tragedie de Salome," music by Florent Schmidt. "Penelope," opera by Gabriel Faure, has had as many representations as the other productions made possible, but the great and favorable impression it made has continued and it will remain

M. Adolph Borchard in Concert at the Salle Erard

M. Adolph Borchard, one of the master pianists of the young school, who had such success in Russia recently, playing the history of the concerto in five great concerts at St. Petersburg with the Imperial Orchestra, gave a concert on Saturday evening, June 7, at Salle Erard. His program included: (1) Ten preludes of Chopin, Op. 28; (2) six Etudes of Rubinstein, Op. 23; (3) the Mozart Sonata in C major; (4) Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques," Op. 13, and (5) Soirees musicales of Rossini-Liszt. A noteworthy program and one which brought out enthusiasm on the part of the large audience.

M. Borchard is an artist, and has virility, a powerful technique, great shades of expression and coloring, and intellectual grasp of his subject, that make him one of the most satisfactory and interesting of pianists. His pianissimos are full of tenderness and color, with a brilliancy quite unusual.

Madame Giulia Valda Organizes Grand Charity Concert Under the Patronage of the British and American Embassies

Madame Giulia Valda, the well-known former opera singer, and present distinguished professor of singing of the Lamperti method, has been honored by being chosen as the successor of Mme. Marchesi to organize each year a big concert for the benefit of St. Joseph's Church, Avenue Hoche. This is no small triumph for an American woman, who has been established in Paris for five years only. But Madame Valda is a woman of great resource and power, and great executive ability. At the entertainments at her studios, are found many of the nobility and famous artists. Madame Lamperti, the wife of the famous Maestro, is associated with Madame Valda under the name of the Lamperti-Valda School of Singing, with a large number of pupils with some very fine voices.

The concert took place on Thursday, June 5, at the Salle Hoche, under the patronage of his excellency, the British Ambassador, and Lady Bertie, and his excellency, the American Ambassador, and Mrs. Herrick.

The program, one of artistic merit, was given by such artists as Madame Eleonora de Cisneros, of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, Sig. Cav. Innocenzo Caldeira, of the Scala of Milan, the trio, Kellert Brothers, M. R. Sacha Volitchenko.

The result was brilliant and the audience warmly applauded the interesting work of the artists.

Among the many distinguished persons present were noted:

Their excellencies Sir Francis and Lady Bertie, their excellencies Mr. and Mrs. Myron T. Herrick, Honorable L. Carnegie, British minister plenipotentiary; Sir Henry and Lady Austin Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mason, American consul general; Mr. W. S. H. Gastrell, British consul; Duchesse de Bassano, Mrs. John Mackay, Princess Stigliano Colonna, Lady Pilter and Misses Pilter, Mrs. J. Lawrence, Mrs. D. Campbell, Mme. Michel Heine, Comtesse R. Coetlogen, Mrs. W. Gay, Marquise de Ganay, Mr. Harry Lehr, Comtesse Wiebarren, Comtesse de Gabrina, Sir Robert and Lady Walton, Comtesse de Chaiseul, Marquis de Montebello, Duchesse de Padone, Barone de Bazus, Baronne d'Erlanger, etc.

Among Madame Valda's pupils were noticed Madame Dargie, Mrs. Humphreys, Marquise d' Aste, Miss Julia E. Porter, Miss Victoria Harrel, Miss Louise Carpenter, Miss Taylor, Miss Eleanor Cator, Miss McClean, Mr. Maurette, Mr. De Loys, Mr. Rousselot, Miss Annie Hanslits, Mrs. Pluth, etc., etc.

sicians, among whom especially pianists and composers, with whom Mr. Tecktonius is very popular. This young musician, besides his remarkable artistic qualities, has a very strong and attractive personality, full of life and magnetism, large in his opinions, and very simple and modest with it all.

He played in a brilliant manner. His technique is to be compared to that of Marc Hamburg, while in his interpretations he thinks for himself, and although one may not always agree with him, he is certainly on the right road and will unfold in a way that a less daring intelligence would miss. gave her first musicale on Friday, June 13, at her Paris home. A large number of guests were present to welcome back this very popular musician, who took such an active part in musical and social circles last year. She has returned to continue her singing under M. Critikos, the well known singer and teacher, and her piano with M. Thuel Burnham, one of the best known masters of Paris.

Mrs. MacArthur has made wonderful progress the past year, and her voice has gained much in richness and volume. She sang Richard Strauss' "Zueignung," and "Elegie" with violin obligato by Miss Christine Roussel, the very talented young violinist. Mrs. MacArthur and Miss Roussel then played together the Grieg Sonata in F Major, followed by "Souvenirs de Moscow." The artists were much encored and warmly congratulated by the delighted guests.

Thuel Burnham June Recital

Although the warm weather has come and Paris is in the full swing of the gayest social and musical season, Thuel Burnham's piano recital at his studios at 119 Rue de la Tour, on June 15, proved one of the strong attractions of the week. The place was crowded to the doors, and the presence of Mrs. John MacArthur, his artist pupil, made the occasion of double interest, as she is so popular here.

The master played as though inspired. He seems to develop new excellencies each time he plays. His technic becomes more perfect, his tone more crystalline and beautiful, his interpretations more profound and dramatic.

The following program was given:

Sonate Op. 31, No. 3.....Beethoven
Allegro
Allegretto vivace
Minuetto
Presto
Deux Romances sans paroles.....Mendelssohn
Trois Preludes.....Chopin
Valse.....Chopin
Reve d'Amour.....Liszt
Rhapsodie.....Liszt

I love to hear Burnham play Beethoven. He has a classical taste and a mastery of self that weaves a profound spell. In the Mendelssohn "Songs Without Words," he was deliciously lyrical. The Chopin numbers were full of mystery and enchantment, while the Liszt compositions showed a brilliancy and an art that raised the enthusiasm to the last pitch. Here, indeed, we have a master. Burnham has more than astonished the faithful public that has crowded his doors all winter. His unfoldment has been much commented upon and his season next year in America will certainly be epoch-making. His studios will be open all summer in Paris, where the climate makes it possible to reside here with pleasure all during the year. In summer the opera will remain open, and also much good music can be heard by the various orchestra.

Perhaps the most extensive collection of musical settings to the poetry of the foremost English poets dating back to the Elizabethan age, is the lately published "Great English Poets Series" album of thirty songs, by Franklin Hopkins, composer of the Modern Poets album and Keats and Shakespeare albums of songs. There is great variety represented in this large volume, and although a careful perusal would indicate that Mr. Hopkins has not achieved individuality in his work, the diverse demands of the widely varying poems used and the evident purpose to make the music adapted to the words is the probable reason. The settings, however, possess points of similarity that show Mr. Hopkins to be a student of harmony with a particular relation to musical form. The solidarity of the song framework is noticeable in nearly every case, and the utmost simplicity apparent in many of these lyrics. In Milton's "L' Allegro," nevertheless, the most ambitious and longest, a very complex form of harmonic progression is employed, and it would seem as though the composer had tried to translate quite literally into music the famous lines: "The melting voice through mazes running, Untwisting all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony; That Orpheus' self may heave his head from golden slumber, on a bed of heaped Elysian flowers."

The characteristics of Mr. Hopkins' work are directness, simplicity, freedom from pianistic or vocalistic virtuosity, and always a strict adherence to form and to direct melodic appeal. The effects may appear somewhat old-fashioned, but it is clear that there is no evidence whatever that Mr. Hopkins has had anything else in mind outside of an assiduous and studied endeavor to give an Anglo-Saxon flavor to Anglo-Saxon words. The public has been clamoring for English songs, and with such material singers should be able more and more to satisfy this desire legitimately. Some of the most striking numbers in the album, with the poet represented, are as follows: "Her Glance Was the Best of the Rays," Byron; "Lord of Burleigh," "Ever Varying Madeline," Tennyson; "She Was a Phantom of Delight," Wordsworth; "From Comus," Milton; "One Word Is Too Often Profaned," "The Indian Serenade," Shelley. In this album Thomas Moore seems to be the favorite, with six numbers: "At the Mid Hour of Night," "Love Hath Echoes Truer Far," "Sweet Evening Bells," "The Light That Lies in Woman's Eyes," "Then Fare Thee Well," "Whene'er I See Those Smiling Eyes."

Browning, Mrs. Browning, Swinburne, Scott, Kingsley, Jonson, Sidney, Samuel Lover, Chorley and Edwin Arnold also figure. The album is bound in purple and gold, and is marked $3.00. It is published by Cecil Mackie, Inc., New York.

Freischutz," "La Tosca," "Le Cid," "Lakme," "Hamlet," "Mignon," "Carmen."

The work was as a whole very well done, and M. Demontier is to be congratulated. One of the finest voices was that of M. de Bommel, a pupil of Mr. Alfred Baehrens. He has a very powerful baritone of unusual quality, very resonant, and already sings like an artist. His acting gives promise of dramatic talent, and a little more experience will give him an ease and an authority that will add greatly to his power.

The pupils that I saw were well trained and seemed to be at home in their roles. This Cour of Mise-en-Scene can be highly recommended.

Madame Hazzard-Peocock's Successful Second Recital in London

Madame Eleanor Hazzard-Peocock, that delicious artist and great interpreter, brought a new note to the London season by her second recital, which consisted of her arrangement of children's songs and stories under the title of "Tattle-Tales of Childhood." She was assisted by Mrs. Jessie L. Gaynor, the popular American composer, who played the most charming and sympathetic accompaniments.

Mrs. Hazzard-Peocock dressed like a big doll, looked most charming, and showed a dramatic power beyond the ordinary. She has wonderful intelligence and a great love for her art. In her classical recitals although well trained in the traditions, she brings a new note, a coloring from her big personality and warm heart. Sincere and earnest, a hard worker with a wonderful organ, beautiful quality, and enormous power used with much reserve. In fact, Mrs. Hazzard-Peocock so delights in the pianissimo, so difficult for powerful voices, that any one hearing for the first time, unless he was an expert, would mistake her voice for a small one, but once the singer gives herself up to her dramatic possibilities the depth and power of her voice is constated.

The London press notices were most complimentary to this artist, who has had a most unprecedented success with our English cousins, who are so cold to strangers, but when once won, remain staunch through life.

Private letters from London friends who were at the last recital announce the great success of Mrs. Hazzard-Peocock, and the intense pleasure they derived from her unique entertainment.

Madame Kathleen Vierke Again Sings at the Salle Gaveau

Madame Kathleen Vierke, the new mezzo-soprano, appeared again in concert at the Salle des Quartuors Gaveau, in a Soiree Litteraire et Musicale given by Mr. Paul Leyssac of the Vaudeville Theater, with the assistance of Mlle. Mudocci, violinist and Mlle. Edvards, pianist. It was an entertainment of rare merit, Mr. Leyssac being a diseur of marked originality and talent, having perfect command of various languages, gave a very varied program in French, German and English.

His sureness is phenomenal and his diction a thing of joy. His rich and vibrant voice, a rare possession, made his interpretations masterly.

Mlle. Mudocci and Mlle. Edvards were delicious.

Madame Kathleen Vierke had the places of honor on the program, and showed again her qualities of artist and musician. Her voice is very rich and full, a beautiful organ, and she brings to her interpretations the gifts of a rich and charming personality. Hers will be a brilliant future and we will watch with the intcrest the career of this delightful singer.

THE CHARM OF THE WORLD'S ARTISTS—

Is the supreme devolopment among musical instruments—the Starr Piano. The most critical requirements of the musician are abundantly satisfied in this unique instrument. It has been accorded marked preference in the aristocratic homes of America and numbers among its enthusiastic patrons musicians of world-wide renown.

This instrument has attained such a high standing because of its unequaled musical qualities. Its unique, sweet singing tone affords perfect support to the voice and proves a never-ending delight to the pianist. Its artistic design of case, with its superb finish, is as instrumental in endearing it to the hearts of the present generation as it was to those who have passed.

OPERA IN ENGLISH FOR ENGLISH-SPEAKING COUNTRIES

(Contributed Editorial)

Carrying on this argument, which seems self-evident, we agree that to make a great musical literature for America and England, our own texts must be our inspiration, but it were narrow and stifling to our music to assert foreign operas should not be translated. German operas are translated for France and Italy, Italian operas for Germany and France, and French operas for Italy and Germany, as well as other forms of vocal music. An occasional opera may be given in Europe where several languages are sung during the performance, but with eleven years' residence in Europe, the writer never heard such an event, and it must be almost too rare to cite in our argument. Anything worth translating can be adequately translated, otherwise it is too local to translate. If we are to make this a united land, English must be more often heard and more rapidly taught to all foreigners who come here to live, and to make our music worth while, English must be sung if we are to educate as well as entertain the public. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways. The writer received from a German musician—referring to some songs sent—the following answer. "As far as the music is concerned, it is beyond criticism, but as the text is English and there is no translation the music is valueless to me or my musical friends." Another friend wrote: "I shall try and get an adequate translation made that my friends may enjoy the song you so courteously dedicated to me." As to understanding what is sung, this rests with the singer, not the public; and even should all not be understood, if music is sung in the language of the public present, and the singers are artists, enough will be understood to make it more enjoyable and instructive than in foreign tongues. If we continue our present polyglot system we are unpardonably unjust to our composers and public at large.

A WORD ABOUT CUTS

Music News makes it the invariable rule to charge for all cuts made for advertisers, and these cuts and the photographs from which they were made are filed away after use and held for orders from their owners.

At the present time we have on hands a great many cuts and photos which belong to advertisers and former advertisers. We shall be very glad to deliver these by messenger or by parcel post if postage is sent to us with instructions.

MUSIC AND MUMMING

By GEORGE CECIL (LONDON)

Some of the concerts which have taken place during the past few days gave one the impression that the ill-prepared performers were unwise in facing competent critics. Others, fortunately, were in every way justifiable, one of the most interesting being the sonata recital offered by Mr. Eugen d'Albert and Miss Beatrice Harrison, the young 'cellist, whose playing undoubtedly places her very high up in the front rank. Most welcome, too, are the special Sunday concerts at the Albert Hall, at which the Schulz-Curtius & Powell concert agency, under whose auspices they are given, present the most famous artists of the day. They may, in fact, be commended to the notice of week-end visitors to London. And, by way of affording pleasure to the unfortunate Miss Alice Liebman, has given a violin recital at Brixton Prison, the enraptured inmates being present in large numbers.

Sir Joseph Beecham's Enterprise

Sir Joseph Beecham's season of Russian opera and Russian ballet at Drury Lane, promises to be the musical sensation of the summer, for, apart from everything else, he has engaged M. Chaliapine, the famous bass, whose hitherto-to prohibitive fee has prevented his appearing in London. The repertoire includes "Boris Godounow," an opera which has had an extraordinary success in Russia and in New York and Paris. Indeed, extra performances were insisted upon by the public during the recent Paris season.

The Shakespeare Festival

The annual Shakespeare festival at His Majesty's Theater, like its predecessors, is drawing all the town. This week "Twelfth Night," with Sir Herbert Tree at Malvolio, has been a potent attraction, and on Monday next "Julius Caesar" goes into the bill. Very enjoyable, too, were the "Merchant of Venice" performances with Sir Herbert's truly realistic and consistently Jewish Shylock, and Miss Marjory Patterson, a young American actress of indisputable talent and charm, as Nerissa. Miss Patterson, by the way, devotes her spare time to writing books, which meet with very considerable appreciation in America, while as a reciter she is in constant demand in all circles.

An Interesting Revival

On the afternoon of the 27th inst., the 72-year-old "London Assurance" of the late Dion Boucicault will be revived at the St. James Theater for one performance only, in aid of the actors' pension fund, the king and queen being present. The cast includes Sir Herbert Tree, Mr. H. B. Irving, Mr. Charles Hawtrey, and Miss Marie Tempest—indeed, such a galaxy of stars has never before been announced.

IRENE BELDEN ZARING

Mrs. Irene Belden Zaring gave a pupils' piano recital, on the afternoon of June 30, at her residence studio, 4451 North Winchester avenue, Ravenswood. She was assisted on the program by Miss Clara Anderson, who gave readings, with musical accompaniments by her sister, Miss Grace Anderson; and by Miss Jessie Miller, soprano.

Master Robert Sanders, a pupil six and one-half years old, played the following group as one of the numbers of the program: "The Sprite" (Lemont), "Youth and Joy" (Schytte), "Love Song" (Alletter), "Circling the Christmas Tree" (Mrs. Adams), "The Castagnettes" (Graham P. Moore).

THE PREISER MUSIC SCHOOL

The two concerts given to signalize the close of a season of the Preiser School of Austin were extremely successful and drew audiences of fine size and also of enthusiastic admirers of the work of Mr. Preiser and his assistants.

Remarkable, indeed, is the fact that this teacher is able to hold together so many young violinists and to so successfully amalgamate them into an orchestra which, despite the fact that it contains very many beginners, he is yet able to drill and manipulate into excellent performances of concerted numbers.

At the closing concert last Monday evening these players were heard in "The Poet and Peasant" overture, a "Serenade" by Von Blon, and "The Coronation March" by Meyerbeer, in all of which the concerted work was fine, and in the latter number especially a brilliancy was attained which was remarkable. Some little players there were in this body of students whose age could not have been more than twelve or fourteen, and yet so surely had their technic been formed, and so admirably were they accustomed to follow the Preiser baton that the totality of effect was musical as well as accurate.

Very many young soloists appeared to much advantage to themselves and to the great credit of Mr. Preiser whose work was shown to be of finest caliber and the most certain aspects. These included Potter Duff, Orville Hayward, William Groom, Carrol Dickerson, James Lanigan, Frank Brought, Francis Keene, Walter Madsen and Jean Ahern, while Sherley Platt proved herself well advanced in a movement from the Mendelssohn concerto; Mary Johnson was excellent in the "Zigeunerweisen" of Sarasate, and Fred Braucher, a thorough young artist, was remarkable in the ease and brilliance with which he delivered Bassini's very attractive "Dance of the Goblins." Miss Johnson and Mr. Braucher joined with Fannie Barnett Preiser in giving a fine reading of a trio by Moszkowski.

Several piano pupils of Mrs. Preiser were heard in work which was creditable alike to them and their teacher, the numbers being "Berceuse" (Godard), "A Poem" (MacDowell), "Con Amour" (Beaumont), and a Mozart fantasie by a pupil not scheduled on the program; the others being Dorothy Barnett, Evelyn Morgan and Helen Stephenson, all four of the players showing good technic and a very unusual regard for tonal values.

C. E. W.

JENNIE F. W. JOHNSON

Miss Jennie F. W. Johnson, contralto, assisted by Mr. Hunter, pianist, and Mr. Ambrosius, 'cellist, gave a recital, June 26, at Lincoln Center for the American Book Company's School of Music. She just finished a series of ensemble concerts Friday morning for the American Conservatory of trios from Bach's cantatas, with Adolph Weidig, violin, and Louise Robyn, pianist, it being the first time these Bach numbers had been given in America. Saturday morning, July 12, she gives a recital, with Herbert Butler, violinist, in Kimball Hall for the American Conservatory.

THE HADLEY SCHOOL OF MUSIC

The first regular semi-monthly student recital of the summer season of the Hadley School of Music was given last Tuesday evening.

A goodly number of students have registered for the summer term, which opened June 24.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

Another excellent program was given in Kimball Hall last Saturday morning, the occasion marking the second in the series of recitals that are being given under the auspices of the American Conservatory's summer school. Edna Cookingham, pianist, and Charles La Berge, baritone, were the artists heard, the former opening the program with Beethoven's sonata "Apassionata," which proved to be a novelty so far as this writer is concerned, because of the fact that it has never appeared on a program to which we have listened. So we feel indebted to Miss Cookingham, not alone because she gave the opportunity to hear so great a masterpiece, but more because she presented it so well. The first and last movements were taken at the very quick tempos required, yet good tone and clarity were preserved in all passages. The "Andante" with variations was given with dignity and tonal beauty. Liszt's "Waldesrauschen" and the familiar d'Albert

EDNA COOKINGHAM

"Scherzo" made up the second part, and the latter was played with great vivacity and made scintillant and effective. Miss Cookingham closed the program with the Strauss-Schuett "Fledermaus Waltz." The pianist displayed a high order of technical and musical equipment throughout her portion of the recital and proved herself to be in the forefront of that attractive band of young artist-pianists, which is so numerous in Chicago and which goes a long way toward creating here a satisfactory musical atmosphere. Mr. Charles La Berge is a young artist whose interpretations and

AAGE FREDERICKS

Following is some foreign comment on the work of the distinguished Danish violinist, Mr. Aage Fredericks, and also some more recent American notices:

A NEW MUSICAL STAR

At the Saturday morning recital I heard the distinguished violinist, Mr. Aage Fredericks, play several compositions by northern composers, and also some classical works with great beauty. . . . By comparison with other great artists it is easy to see that Mr. Fredericks is among the best in his art. . . . . His interpretation of the works he presented aroused much enthusiasm.—Dansk-Amerikanisen. (Translation.)

"Underrattelser," Aabo, Finland.—At the concert last night the gifted Danish violinist, Aage Fredericks, appeared for the first time, playing the Wieniawski "Concerto No. 2." Mr. Fredericks made a very fine impression on the audience. His conception in every respect was masterly. The orchestra deserves praise for its eminent support of the performance by Mr. Fredericks. The soloist was recalled several times and respond with an encore.—Korsnen, Viborg, Finland. (Translation.)

RECITAL GREAT SUCCESS

Mr. Fredericks Demonstrates His Remarkable Ability as a Violinist

"Decaturian," Decatur, Ill.—In spite of the storm and rain, the auditorium was almost full and the applause showed that the audience was not disappointed. Decatur seems to enjoy violin music very much, for the announcement of a program with violin numbers calls forth a large audience. Mr. Fredericks was all that could be desired. His bowing was wonderfully effective; he produced a fine singing tone from the violin, and his personal interpretation of the music was fascinating. The "Beethoven Concerto, Opus 61," was a heavy one, Decatur audiences have seldom, if ever heard before. It was interesting throughout and had some especially fine work for the violin alone. The Chopin-Sarasate "Nocturne" will always have a warm welcome in the listeners' hearts, because of the beauty and feeling with which he played it.

Mr. Fredericks' arrangement of the Tolhurst "Intermezzo" and the Gossec-Elman "Gavotte," were rendered delightfully. The last number, Wieniawski's "Souvenir de Moscow," was very brilliant and difficult technically; but he did not let it be mere technic, he gave it an interpretation which only an artist can give.

VIOLINIST WINS WARM WELCOME

Aage Fredericks Heard in Recital—Bow Work Remarkable—Violinist Shuns Conventions

The young Danish violinist made friends not less by his perfect mastery of his instrument and his remarkable interpretative powers than by his gracious manner, which is devoid of all affectations and even of that studied naturalness with which some performers attempt to cover up nervousness. He was as much at ease as if he were playing for the entertainment of a few close friends and conditions were such as to try the soul of the most philosophic artist.—Decatur Press.

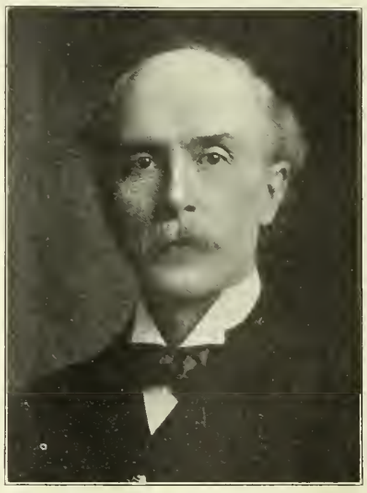
THE PITTSBURGH EISTEDDFOD

FRANCES BOWSER

The Pittsburgh International Eisteddfod, held during four days' time, beginning last Wednesday, deservedly goes down in Americal musical history as one of the most stunning achievements to the credit of the country.

Not at any time were there less than eight thousand persons assembled for the regular performances, in the great auditorium of the Exposition Building, these being representative of twenty states, from Maine to California, and from New York to Texas. In this audience were many of those whose names stand out brilliantly in the world of music. Thus was the financial success assured—the artistic success goes without saying, with Evan Williams, Dr. D. V. Thomas (Swansea, Wales), H. E. Krehbiel, Daniel Protheroe, William Ap Madoc and Elizabeth Tudor lending their presence, and the famous Rhondda Choir of Wales, the Scranton United Choral Society, and the Haydn Choral Society of Chicago carrying off the prizes.



WILLIAM AP MADOC

Before proceeding further a few words culled from the admirable foreword in the official program, which comes from the pen of William Surdival, will undoubtedly be of interest.

"The Eisteddfod, which is distinctly a Welsh institution, has become one of the most efficient and forceful factors in the development of the nation's life and character. . . . . The Eisteddfod for many centuries has protected and preserved the language, the literature, the poetry and the customs of the Welsh people. . . . .To the masses the Eisteddfod is a fountain of educational and national inspiration. . . . It has given to the world of music some of her finest artists. The Eisteddfod knows no party or sect. Today the civilized world pays its respects to this noble institution. Its place in the life of the nation is established. Long live the Eisteddfod."

Promptly at 1 o'clock on Wednesday the ceremonies of the Eisteddfod were begun, with Mr. W. R. Hughes of New York presiding. The musical part of the program was fittingly begun by H. Evan Williams, America's distinguished tenor, followed by a solo by Mrs. Tilly Bodycombe Hughes. Featuring was the competition of children's choruses, the members of each being under fourteen years of age. With twenty choirs competing in singing the two selections stipulated, namely (a) "School Festival Song," by Rhys Herbert, and (b) "Out in the Fields," by Paul Bliss, the first prize of $250 went to Etna and Sharpsburg Choir, an organization of forty-six children. To Mr. Fillmore, the director, goes a big honor. Second came the Snodgrass Public School choir, under the direction of Mr. Morgan Emmanuel, who received the $150; and third ranked Beaver Falls, with Mrs. Hendricks as conductor. To them was awarded $100.

Among the twenty-nine compositions submitted in the American anthem contest none was found sufficiently worthy by the adjudicators to merit the donating of the prize, so the money was withheld. The only two which might have been considered of sufficient excellence to rank with "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America" were disqualified on account of their previous publication. The critics maintained that a worthy national anthem must be a perfect anthem; perfect in sentiment, in structure, text, music, and all else.

DANIEL PROTHEROE AND EVAN WILLIAMS

Thursday's afternoon musical program was opened by Miss Elizabeth Tudor, a well-known New York soprano. Following was the bass solo contest, in which Mr. Sharp and Mr. Daveney distinguished themselves, the former, however, winning the prize of fifty dollars for his excellent interpretation of the "Erl King" (Schubert). However, the highly interesting part of the program was the ladies' choral competition, in which five organizations figured. For what proved to be an almost perfect reading of Cadman's "Indian Mountain Song," and "The Fountain" (Bartlett), Canton, Ohio, with Miss Sarah Lavir at its head, was awarded the initial prize of $500 and a beautiful gold medal; and to Mr. Stephen Martin and the Pittsburgh Ladies' Choral Club, the second place, with a substantial gift of $250. Others perhaps deserving very honorable mention were the Chicago Chorus, under the direction of Haydn Owen, and the Pittsburgh Ladies' Schubert Club, under the direction of Reese R. Reese. The latter conductor had previously acquired the distinction of being the winner in eighty-seven similar contests, all of which were of material importance. Even though this organization failed to win on this occasion it is certain that the members acquitted themselves, under Mr. Reese's direction, with much credit.

On the Thursday evening program sang Miss Lillian Heyward, soprano, of Cleveland, Ohio, the excellence of her reading of the scene et air from "Judith" (Concone), giving her first place in the soprano contest, and the accompanying fifty dollars. This young woman also was given the prize in the duet for soprano and contralto, in "Power Eternal," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater." Miss Dorris May Stadden, also of Cleveland, was the contralto. Since the critics found it indeed worthy of mention, Music News also gives the special space to comment on the voice of Miss Helen Hiner of Pittsburgh, a contralto who did not win in the duet, perhaps on account of the soprano with whom she was associated. That hers is a contralto of very extraordinary quality, and one which is all too seldom heard, was the substance of the commendation given by H. E. Krehbiel, critic of the New York Tribune. Miss Hiner later was honored in the contralto solo contest, dividing the prize of fifty dollars with Mrs. Mabel Jones of Cleveland, Ohio. The test piece in this instance was the difficult and beautiful "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Delilah" (Saint-Saens.)

Hildach's "Passage Bird's Farewell," the tenor and baritone duet was successfully presented by Messrs. Phillip Warren and Thomas Beynon of Scranton, Pa.

Standing out vividly in the solo contests was that for the tenor voice, the very difficult and most exacting test of a satisfactory reading of the Verdi "Celeste Aida," (key of B flat) being given. Of this Mr. Krehbiel of the New York Tribune said in part: "This song is one of the very severest tests which may be applied to a tenor. I have not heard five tenors who could sing 'Aida' to my satisfaction. It must be ecstatic in expression, and represents a heartfelt outburst of passion. The singer must not shout. Also the piece is a wonderful study in sostenuto and sustained phrasing."

After listening to eight most worthy preliminary performances. Mr. Krehbiel expressed himself as amazed at the beauty of the contests.

In this exacting test J. B. Seifert of Pittsburgh won the prize of fifty dollars, unstinted praise of the adjudicators, and a near ovation from thousands of persons in the audience.

Stunning to the last word was the magnificent singing of the Rhondda (Wales) Choir of sixty sturdy Welshmen, in the male chorus competition on Friday. Its rendering of the superb "Castilla" (Daniel Protheroe) not only astonished the entire audience, but amazed even the adjudicators, it was so well presented under the baton of Mr. John Phillips. Such imaginative qualities, such poetic feeling, such vivid and forceful telling of the story has not been equaled, much less exceeded by any body of male voices. To the Welsh singers who came across the seas were awarded a gold medal and $1,000. However, it must be acknowledged that Pittsburgh, with Ernest Lunt at the head of the Mendelssohn Choir, proved to be a close second. Many in the audience maintained that perhaps it was even the equal of the premiers.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch commented as follows: "In announcing the verdict Adjudicator Krehbiel said in most positive tones that never at an Eisteddfod, either national or international, had male choral singing been heard to equal that of yesterday. Mr. Krehbiel acknowledged being Welsh only by adoption. He went even further and said he had never heard the equal at any of the famous German saengerfests. With Dr. Thomas and Dr. Protheroe, the other adjudicators, the three have been judging these contests for many years, and their word is law."

The second contest number, also magnificently sung, was "What Care I How Fair She Be" (unaccompanied), by Blumenthal.

It is now a matter of regret that the other most excellent Pittsburgh choir, a Welsh organization, was disqualified on account of presenting four men above the stipulated number. This is thought by many to have been an accident, as sixty-eight men had assisted at rehearsals, although but sixty were expected to appear at the final singing. Mr. Isaac Prosser is the conductor. Very naturally excitement followed, and it was here that J. J. Davis, president of the association, showed fairness and poise, and above the calling, announced that it was his unpleasant duty to pronounce the society disqualified.

On Saturday Roger Howell, baritone, of Wilkes Barre, Pa., was awarded the fifty dollars for the most acceptable rendition of Verdi's "Toreador" (in B flat). Miss Helen Root of Canton, Ohio, was the successful pianist; in her reading of the A flat Ballade, Op. 3, No. 7, Chopin, she really merited the fifty dollars.

On this Saturday's afternoon program were two artists whose appearances are indicative of the highly artistic character of the Eisteddfod. They are Miss Elizabeth Tudor, a New York soprano, and H. Evan Williams, the Welsh-American tenor.

Miss Tudor has a most beautiful voice and a splendid bearing. She is able to use the full resources of her voice with perfect ease, and the resonance and beauty of her tone is beyond fault finding.

Her singing of "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly" was one of the most distinguished features of the Eisteddfod—her voice is of such exquisite quality and her style is so absolute that it would be difficult indeed to imagine a more delightful reading of this famous number.

Later, in the "Lucia" Sextet her attack of the extreme high note was the work of a consummate artist and the tone she was able to show on this note was exquisite in quality and manipulation.

The Eisteddfod committee was indeed fortunate in securing Mr. H. Evan Williams for this event, for not only in this concert, but also throughout the meeting he proved himself again and again an artist of the most superb equipment and the most beautiful artistry. One ovation after another was accorded him, and no one who was present at these concerts will ever forget the thrilling quality of his voice or the passion and exquisite beauty of his vocalism.

Another example of the standard of excellence insisted upon by the adjudicators was shown in the manner of giving the "quintet" prize for the attempted rendering of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Of the several quintets appearing but one was decided to be worthy of but one half the sum set aside for this contest. Pittsburgh singers were given twenty-five dollars.

Although it is not possible for Music News to give space to other than the musical parts of the numerous programs, still it feels compelled to make comment upon the absolutely able and delightful readings of Mrs. Edith Harris Scott, in selections from Ella Wheeler Wilcox and Kipling. These were given masterful interpretations at her hands and brought rounds of merited applause. Mrs. Harris Scott is also a contralto of good parts, and appeared successfully later in the "Sextet" from "Lucia," in company with Miss Tudor, Evan Williams, Gwilym Miles, Mr. Beddoe and Mr. Roberts, on Friday evening's grand miscellaneous concert.

Few such brilliant concerts are ever heard as that of the evening of July 4, when all the chorus organizations joined in the "Cambria Song of Freedom," by T. J. Davis (conducted by the composer), and Parry's arrangement of the "Pilgrims' Chorus," conducted by Dr. D. Vaughan Thomas, and many soloists appearing also.

Besides the "Sextet" before mentioned, Mrs. Hughes was heard to advantage in "My Heart Is Weary" (Goring Thomas), and Mr. Miles sang Peccia's "Gloria," to the great pleasure of the audience.

Mr. Haydn Gunter of Muncie, Ind., proved himself a splendid violinist in some numbers by Wieniawski, drawing a very full and sweet tone, and playing with most artistic interpretative thought.

Mr. Williams was simply superb in the Gounod "Lend Me Your Aid," and Miss Tudor was captivating in Del Acqua's "Provencal Song."

Miss Sue Harvard, a soprano who has been accepted as one of Pittsburgh's best artists, proved herself at this concert to be truly splendid as to vocal equipment, and also to have a presence and a style which made her work doubly attractive.

The great aria from Weber's "Oberon" is a searching test for any soprano, for it not only demands dramatic power and breadth, but it also presupposes the possession of coloratura possibilities much beyond the average and an interpretative ability which will cover many phases of expression. Miss Harvard met all these tests triumphantly and her singing was, indeed, beautiful. The audience recognized her great ability to the full and gave her most enthusiastic applause.

Later in the quartet from "Rigoletto" she was joined in a thrilling reading by Mrs. Scott, Mr. Williams and Mr. Miles.

The real climax to the magnificent music festival, and one indeed absolutely fitting in every sense, was the chief choral competition, in which six wonderful organizations participated, singing the "Challenge of Thor" first, following this with the delightful "Little Bird in the Air," from "King Olaf" (Elgar).

Though enthusiasm reigned throughout the several days, and the numerous sessions, the now keyed-up audience simply lost control of all conventions, and gave way to abandoned cheering when Chicago and Scranton sang. The adjudication was not given until the evening session, but that Chicago would follow with Scranton in the lead was anticipated, and with good reason.

Dr. Vaughn Thomas, the distinguished Wales adjudicator, made the formal announcements. To the Scranton United Choral Society, under the leadership of John T. Watkins, was given the $5,500 prize; to the Chicago Haydn Choral Society, with H. W. Owens, conductor (director of the voice department of the Western Conservatory of Music), went the generous second prize of $1,000; while Cleveland, Ohio, came in for the third place with a $500 award.

Following is given in part the criticism of the adjudicators, Daniel Protheroe, Dr. Vaughn Thomas and H. E. Krehbiel, as read by Dr. Thomas from the stage;

"I. Cleveland in (a) "The Challenge of Thor," firm tone, basses fine, sopranos shrill, tenors weak; intonation good, tempo a trifle fast, lacking dignity. (b) "Little Bird in the Air," sang crisply and with precision, though tempo was too rapid; interpretation satisfactory.

II. Pittsburgh Choral Union. (a) Tone not sufficiently solid in basses and tenors; enunciation not very good, tempo too fast. (b) Basses good, sopranos tremulous to a degree; tempo good, rhythm not suave, expression fair; interpretation on the whole good.

III. Monongahela Valley Choir. (a) Tone forced, sopranos shrill, altos too open; good tempo though control was lost later; male voices superior to female voices here; intonation faulty. (b) Interpretation intelligent.

IV. Philadelphia Competitive Society. (a) Women's voices here finer than those of the men. Clean singing, tone not scintillating enough, not sufficient "molto maestoso;" interpretation not vivid; intonation good. (b) Female voices fine, tempo too fast, too "tame;" intonation good.

V. Haydn Society of Chicago. (a) Good, round low voices. Accurate, precise, and well knit and energetic; intonation fine, tempo satisfactory, good sostenuto of tone, fine interpretation of "Challenge of Thor." (b) Tenors very good, sopranos and altos sang well, enunciation good, rhythm fine, interpretation very good.

VI. Scranton, Pa., United Choral. (a) Fine body of singers, magnificent basses showed brilliantly; first tone had a true resoluto. "Here amid the icebergs," given a finely realistic interpretation of that phrase; accuracy and intonation precision evident, rhythm virile, interpretation thrilling. (b) All qualities that make up a finished performance there.

It was a great achievement."

The Eisteddfod closed on Saturday evening with a performance of "King Olaf" (Elgar), from which the choral contest numbers had been chosen, and considerable speech making and felicitations, an audience of ten thousand people being present.

The chorus included all the competing bodies, and numbered 942 voices; as these were picked in every sense of the word the quality of the tone was something wonderful, though the ensemble with the orchestra was not maintained absolutely at all times.

These numbers were under the baton of Daniel Protheroe of Chicago, and this splendid musician showed his alertness and his authority in unmistakable terms, and has to his credit a great achievement in bringing this great mass of singers safely through the numbers absolutely without previous rehearsal.

The soloists of this notable performance were Elizabeth Tudor, H. Evan Williams and Gwilym Miles, than which no better group could possibly have been chosen, each of these singers adding still more of distinction to the esteem in which they were already held.

"My Country, 'Tis of Thee" made a fitting finale to the whole event, and sent the immense audience happily away.

The management of the stupendous event was excellent throughout, and volumes of praise could be given to each of the men in executive position.

Mr. Protheroe was forceful and efficient in whatever position he was placed; Mr. William Ap Madoc also brought his great knowledge of the Welsh Eisteddfod into favorable play during his brief stay in Pittsburgh.

Mr. James J. Davis, the president of the association, proved himself absolutely fine in his position, and was greatly assisted by the entire staff of officials, especially active and efficient being Mr. W. B. Jones, one of the directors.

singing ability afford great satisfaction. He sang two finely arranged groups with poise and finished style. His voice is excellent and sympathetic and of comprehensive range. The beauties of Grieg's "From Monte Pincio" were artistically set forth by Mr. La Berge, and tripplingly, indeed, went Mendelssohn's "I Am a Roamer Bold." Handel's "Droop Not Young Lover" was made vocally and interpretatively beautiful, while the climactic moments were finely achieved and the dramatic qualities impressively set forth in Rubinstein's "The Asra" and Schubert's "Der Doppelganger." Miss Esther Hirshberg played beautiful accompaniments.

GEORGE MORTIMER BRUSH.

HOW MUCH IS A MILLION?

The breezy comedy, "How Much is a Million?" is being acted at the Fine Arts Theater by its author, C. R. Hopkins, and his pretty wife, who as the possessor of the million carries the requisite manner and wears the multitudinous and very elegant clothes in exactly the right fashion. She is a very attractive actress also and is but one of a cast which is excellently balanced throughout.

Mr. Hopkins himself plays the part of an ingenious young writer with very neat emphasis on its comedy points and an altogether likable impersonation as a whole.

The play is certainly very original as to subject matter and it is filled with the most clever dialogue heard in any play for many months.

The audiences have been very good, considering the excessive hot weather, and Mr. Hop...ns has won many friends for his triple ability as author-producer-actor.

BEFORE THE AFTERNOON SESSION AT THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF ORGANISTS AT OCEAN GROVE

The accompanying picture, the third of a series which were taken at Ocean Grove last summer, shows the Organists present at that time gathered in front of the door of the Convention Room before an afternoon session.

THE OCEAN GROVE STORM

The following is copied from the Ocean Grove Citizen:

THAT WONDERFUL STORM

How It Is Advertised by Special Features—Drinking Cups, Fans, Parasols and Caps

Last season over six hundred thousand people paid admission to hear the "Ocean Grove Storm" played on the big Hope-Jones organ by Clarence Reynolds, the official organist. On Saturday night, the first performance of the season, it was heard by several thousand people, showing that it is as popular as ever. It is certain that nothing on this coast has been so thoroughly advertised. No matter where you turn, you come up against a reminder that the "Storm" is doing business at the old stand.

Among the novel features adopted by Director Tali Esen Morgan this year to advertise the "Storm" will be several hundred umbrellas, each six feet wide, made of heavy canvas, which will be loaned free of charge to people on the sands and will be presented to all the teamsters in town. Two thousand water-proof fiber caps for boys and girls will be given out next week. One hundred thousand paper drinking cups will be given away on all the excursion trains coming to Asbury Park and Ocean Grove. Two-feet thermometers, with a "'Storm' Every Day at the Auditorium," will be given to all hotels and boarding houses. Thousands of two-color postals, showing the interior of the Auditorium, will be given away on the boardwalk.

The "Storm" is a story of the war, given entirely on the organ. It begins in darkness, then the morning, singing of the birds in the forest, bugle calls in the distant camp. Soldiers on the march to the music of brass bands and fife-and-drum corps. First heard very faintly in the distance, then drawing nearer, passing by and again lost in the distance. The next scene is a mountain country in the South, and its beauty and grandeur suggested by the organ building up and playing the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah." Merry-making in the camp—fiddles and bagpipes. Afternoon service in the old country church. A funeral march in camp. Approaching thunder storm. Lightning. Rain and wind, then the storm breaks in all of its fury. The big pipes, which produce the thunder-effect, are under a wind pressure of fifty inches, whereas the biggest organs of the world are under ten inches. After the storm passes away, and the skies have cleared, singing is heard at the evening service in the church. Ten o'clock strikes, the bugle blows "taps" and the composition ends with the "soldier's dream"—"Home, Sweet Home." It is a fact that eight thousand people sit for forty minutes without apparently making a move. The Auditorium is as quiet as a grave, so intently is everybody in listening.

Churches

NEW FIRST CONGREGATIONAL

The series of concerts being given at the New First Congregational Church under the direction of H. Augustine Smith have been attracting great attention and the programs have been of much interest.

The first concert was given on June 24 and was called a "High School Night," the list of works given being engagingly light, with the exception of "The Wreck of the Hesperus" (Brewer), which was given in the well known style of the New First choirs, the solos being sung in excellent way by Mable Corlew Smidt.

Tuesday evening, July 1, was Wagner night and served to introduce to the west side Mr. John Doane, Jr., an organist who has already attained great prominence on the North Shore, though his residence in Evanston has been but brief.

Mr. Doane has the most amazing technical equipment and plays the organ with an assurance and a mastery which give his work an interest which but rarely attaches to organ playing. His knowledge of registration is absolute and his skill in manipulating any given organ is marvelous. The big old organ at the New First is not easy to manipulate, by any means, but Mr. Doane was complete master of it on Tuesday evening and held it down to a suavity and at the same time a variety of effect which it has seldom shown.

The playing of the "Liebestod" from "Tristan and Isolde" was masterly also on its interpretative side, and held the audience spellbound in interest, the ensuing applause being of such a nature that an encore was unavoidable. Mr. Doane played "The Evening Star" with such intensity and such grace that he made his hearers forget how hackneyed it is, and they listened with keen delight and appreciation to the lovely melody and sincere appreciation of the artistry with which it was manipulated.

A fantasie from "Lohengrin," including chorus numbers as well as a solo sung in splendid way by Mable Corlew Smidt, and one by Roscoe King which also gave much satisfaction, was used, the accompaniments throughout being done by Mr. Doane and being an absolutely impressive object lesson on the possibilities of the organ.

The program contained further the "Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger," given in its violin solo form by Mr. King, and the "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin," sung by Mrs. Smidt with rare purity of tone and a most engagingly direct interpretation.

The program of this week (review of which will be given in our next issue), was as follows:

Solo and chorus, Land of Hope and Glory.....Elgar
Mr. Frank M. Dunford and Chorus

Songs—
Old Folk Song
A Modern Song
A Patriotic Song
Miss Lucy J. Hartman, Contralto

Chorus—
Eldorado .....Pinsuti

Cantata, Paul Revere's Ride.....Busch
The Boy Choir and Men
Mr. Dunford, bass; Mr. John Doane, organist

National Hymns—
The Star Spangled Banner
Tenting Tonight
America
Choir and Congregation

The series will close on Tuesday evening, July 15, when an oratorio night will be given, including selections from "Holy City." and Miss Florence G. Boydston will play, as an organ solo, the "Nuptial March" by Dubois and the "Triumphal March" by Buck.

REINDAHL VIOLINS AND BOWS
VIOLAS and 'CELLOS

Artists know the rarity of violins whose tones are "sweet" from lowest G to A in altissimo. You know how much you desire a violin whose tone qualities are distinguished in power, intensity, brilliance, evenness, sympathy, perfection of open fifths, stopped fifths, thirds, octaves, clear harmonics, pure pizzicato tones, distinct arpeggios, distinct in shake, trill and staccato, and withal quickly responsive to bow-pressure from real pianissimo to fortissimo. If you have such a violin you may not be interested; if you have not, you will be interestad in a booklet—"An Artist's Touch"—which I will gladly mail you FREE, and which contains opinions from world famous artists who use

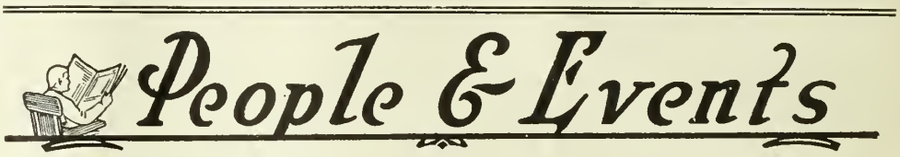
CENTENARY M. E. CHURCH

Centenary Methodist Episcopal Church is located just where a church is much needed, but the following which made it a notable organization once upon a time has flown westward and northward. It is a handsome building, and the furnishings of the richest material. The walnut pediments could hardly be obtained in these days at any price.

A splendid band of enthusiasts keeps alive the former traditions of the rich musical services. A small audience attended on the hot Tuesday of last week, the annual concert of the choir. But all the factors taking part did their best with such willingness and earnestness that the Stainer cantata "Daughter of Jairus," made a very good impression. W. R. Chesnutt sang the baritone parts, as well as leading his little band along with some nice thoughts about shading. Miss Augusta B. Colson sang the soprano parts capitally, and Mr. David Ogden was the tenor. The miscellaneous first part of the evening was not heard.

ALBERT COTSWORTH.



DAVID BISPHAM

Mr. Bispham finished his American tour of one hundred and five concerts at Colorado Springs on April 18, and was immediately re-engaged to sing again in that city and in Denver upon his return to the United States early in September. Arrangements are on foot for Mr. Bispham to reappear at the Greek Theater, Berkeley, Cal., the day after he lands from Australia. At Mr. Bispham's previous concert at the Greek Theater an audience of six thousand heard him.

Mr. Bispham gave two concerts in Honolulu the first week in May, en route to Sydney, which were so successful that a third was demanded. The Star Bulletin says:

So great an impression has America's premier baritone made on the music lovers of this city, that it is with deepest regret that those who appreciate music that assays 24-carat pure, realize that he has gone.

Mr. Bispham's Australian season opened in Sydney on May 31st.

CLAYTON LUNHAM

Clayton W. Lunham, tenor, has completed a three months' western vaudeville tour with The Chicago Grand Opera Quintet, and since his return has been heard several times in recital.

June 10th he sang a program for the Ridgemore Golf Club. July 4th he gave a recital at the Edwards Sanitarium in Naperville, Ill. July 5th he sang a program in Lake Forest, Ill., and in the evening filled an engagement for Mr. Samuel B. Garton. His talented wife is his accompanist.

MARIE BERGERSEN

Music News is pleased to show on its front page today a likeness of Miss Marie Bergersen, a young Chicago pianist, who has been a pupil of Louise Robyn and Adolph Weidig and has won much more than ordinary distinction, both as a student and as a young artist.

She leaves shortly for an extended stay in Europe and Music News joins with her numerous other friends in hoping for her a most successful foreign experience.

The following information about Miss Bergersen is copied from the North-West News:

On July 30, Miss Marie Bergersen, the nineteen-year-old Northwest Side pianist, violinist and composer, sails from New York on the S. S. Francis Joseph, for Vienna, Austria, to complete her musical education under the unusual facilities provided by the imperial government. As her stay abroad will cover a period of two years, Miss Bergersen will have ample opportunity to gratify her every wish to complete her musical education under the tutelage of some of the greatest "Old World" masters.

L. E. Bergersen of New York, a brother of Miss Marie, and his wife, will act as chaperones for Miss Bergersen, as they expect to spend a corresponding period of time abroad. In the meantime, the hundreds of Chicagoans who in the past have enjoyed delightful renditions by Miss Bergersen undoubtedly will have at least one more opportunity of listening to her again in concert before she sails.

The proposed trip abroad this summer marks the second Miss Bergersen has made. In the summer of last year Miss Bergersen was abroad under the chaperonage of Miss Louise Robyn, one of her tutors, and during her stay, played by appointment before some of the "Old World" masters, including Godowsky and Carreno.

Miss Bergersen is the daughter of Louis B. Bergersen, 3269 Wrightwood avenue, in Logan Square, who is well known in Norwegian and professional circles. Mr. Bergersen entertained a few friends at his home a week ago yesterday, including Lars Haukenese, the artist, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Bull of Irving Park, when Miss Bergersen favored her delighted audience with varied selections from the works of Verdi, Liszt, Grieg and Ole Oleson. Improvisations from the works of Verdi, Liszt, and some of her own compositions were felicitously rendered with a finish and suberb technic familiar to her hearers at Kimball Hall and at Music Hall in the Fine Arts Building.

Press Comment

Some press comment on the work of Miss Bergersen follows:

Of the pianists, the largest gift for piano playing was unmistakably made manifest by Miss Marie Bergersen, who elected to be heard in the opening movement of Tschaikowsky's first concerto. This young performer demonstrated the qualities of interpretation—much more famous pianists have not always possessed them—which are essential to the most convincing reading of such music. These qualities consist of a certain imaginativeness of style. Miss Bergersen was successful in producing a large sonority of tone without the hard hittng whch is the last and desperate resort of many of her colleagues. Moreover, she played Tchaikowsky's movement with much brilliancy and dash. An admirable gift is hers."—Chicago Record-Herald, June 16, 1911.

The Auditorium was packed to the last seat last Thursday evening, on the occasion of the silver jubilee of the American Conservatory of Music. Among those appearing on the program was the young Norwegian pianist, Miss Marie Bergersen, who played Tschaikowsky's concerto for piano in B flat minor with orchestra accompaniment. She played the difficult composition with an understanding, brilliancy and power worthy of an artist of the first magnitude. She was recalled several times amidst a storm of applause. Musical critics are unanimously of the opinion that she possesses rare musical talent and is destined for a brilliant career. —Skandinaven, Chicago, June 18, 1911.

In particular must be mentioned the talent displayed by Marie Bergersen, a young pianiste, who gave a very clever reading of the first movement of Tschaikowsky's B flat minor concerto for piano and orchestra. The playing of this selection is a task for virtuosos and the dash and spirit, aside from the musical manner, which Miss Bergersen brought to the performance of the work, called forth a storm of applause.—Chicago Examiner, June 16, 1911.

Miss Marie Bergersen played with a poise, a technical surety, a volume of tone and understanding of the music that was remarkable.—Chicago Evening Post, June 16, 1911.

MISS BERGERSEN AS A COMPOSER

Miss Bergersen has already gained much prestige as a composer, and her works have been played on several occasions in Chicago. The following comment was printed in Musical America recently:

The most startling opus 1 recently put forth is perhaps "Three Silhouettes" for the piano by one Marie Bergersen, issued by Clayton F. Summy, the Chicago publisher. There is little that appears today that attracts more than passing attention, unless it be the work of some ultra-modern Frenchman, Russian or newly discovered German pathfinder in musical art, and so out of practically a clear sky come these silhouettes by a composer hitherto unknown. They are pieces in the smaller forms most unusual in their harmonic makeup, yet the reader of them wonders whether their composer represents a new voice in the maelstrom of modernity or is an imitator of considerable ingenuity. After careful investigation one is more likely to conclude that the latter is the case and that they have been rightly called "Silhouettes," for they are in their manner of expression "shades of Debussy, Ravel, Florent Schmitt, et al." Curiously enough the composer who sets out to write in this style invariably goes the originator one better, and this Marie Bergersen has done. The first one contains chord combinations (one uses this term for want of a better one) that have no basis according to any system that has yet been set down; the second is frankly Debussyan and the final one has charm. Such a piece as the last mentioned, a Vivace in E minor, has a place as a clever bit of modern writing, ingeniously contrived and effervescent in its sparkling qualities.

"Three Silhouettes." For the piano. By Marie Bergersen, opus 1. Published by the Clayton F. Summy Company, Chicago, Ill.

JESSIE LYNDE HOPKINS

Miss Hopkins is spending the month of July in a trip through the Thousand Islands, Boston and the sea shore. In August she will go to Devils Lake, Wis.

Following is some local newspaper comment on the recent successful appearance at the May festival at Eau Claire, Wis.

Miss Hopkins made her first appearance before an Eau Claire audience and notwithstanding the handicap imposed by a severe cold, was able to deliver her lines in convincing fashion and one that proves much to the liking of her auditors. Her voice is a rich contralto of much beauty and she colors it delightfully to suit the passing mood.

The soloists had chosen, and well chosen, their groups of songs. First Miss Jessie Lynde Hopkins sang five selections of children's songs and was called upon again and again. Her beautiful contralto voice was greatly enjoyed. (Advertisement.)

Chicago Lyric Quartet is now hard at work rehearsing for its Chautauqua season, which opens at Marysville, Ohio, July 20. The personnel of the quartet is the same this year as last. Eudora Moody Brock, soprano; Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; Grant Kimbell, tenor, and Collins J. Brock, bass and manager. Miss Helen Gallup, who so ably supported them as accompanist last year, is unable to go with the quartet this year, and her place has been filled by Mr. Stanley Martin, a very competent young pianist from Northwestern University School of Music.

JOHN LORING COOK

Mr. Cook is having an unusually busy summer season. Among the new voices just enrolled is Miss Eva Burford of Wilmar, Ark., a promising mezzo-soprano. Miss Irene Sage of Chicago Grand Opera Company and Miss Agnes Davis of the same company are doing very satisfactory work with Mr. Cook. Mrs. George Shaw is again accompanying for Mr. Cook, after her trip to Duluth, Minn.

Among the callers at the studio this week was Mr. Reginald Frost of Detroit, Mich., and a former pupil five years ago. Mr. Will Longstreet, a pupil of Mr. Cook seven years ago, has just resumed his work and is singing better than ever before.

TWO ENDORSEMENTS OF MISS ELLIS

My Dear Miss Ellis:—I congratulate you upon your well deserved success. Your Keyboard Harmony is doing much towards the development of music thinking minds.

With best wishes, I am,
Yours sincerely,
(Signed) MRS. OSCAR DEIS.

Oscar Deis School for Artistic Piano Playing, Auditorium Building, Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Miss Ellis:—I suppose you have heard from Miss ——— regarding taking your course of keyboard harmony, and also Miss ———. Both of these girls are my pupils and you will find them reliable in every way.

When do you come to Memphis? I see in your Etude advertisement that you expect to be here some time this month. Write or wire me in advance so I can arrange my hours.

I regret I have been unable to do anything as yet but look over the lessons, but I am delighted and am anxious to have time to give them the attention I wish to.

Hoping to see you very soon, I remain,
Very sincerely,
(Signed) MRS. E. T. TOBEY.

CHICAGO IS TO HEAR SCHOENBERG IN FALL

Early next fall, just as soon as the concerts of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra are under way, we shall have our first good chance at the "last word in music"—at least up to the present. Things are moving with such rapidity in the musical world that by next fall a new portent may have arisen whose baleful light may altogether obscure that of Schoenberg and make him seem as academic a composer as he has made Richard Strauss appear, but so far as mortal eye, or ear, or tongue—we know not which organ should be employed—can at the present moment foretell, Schoenberg will remain for the coming six months the final word.

Mr. Stock has already in his hands the score of Schoenberg's "Kammer Symphonie," so that there is no longer any doubt but that we shall have the opportunity for a taste of his quality, and Mr. Stock also has the promise of at least one more of his orchestral works, as well as one by Scribiane, which is entitled to enter in the same class. Now that we know for sure that we are to have this music, the subject of a fitting reception for this new evangel of art becomes pressing. Are we to permit this new music to enter calmly by the regular door and take its place as though it were merely an ordinary visitor?

Up to the present time we people of Chicago have never had the courage to express any opinion in a concert hall, save one of guarded praise, or a mildly deprecatory smile. possibly in rare instances, verging on a sneer, but never quite attaining full fruition. Now no metropolis has ever been able to write its title clear as an art center which had not at least to its credit one riot, while the older and more important the city, the longer the list of riots to which it could point with pride. What better opportunity could we ever expect to have, one more in keeping with the traditions of the art-loving cities of the old world, than the first performance in America of a symphony by Arnold Schoenberg, for the inauguration of our music riots?

The time has come when we should have the strength of mind to cast off the last swaddling bands of our musical infancy, to stand forth in the vigor of our prime, prepared to assume the responsibilities of adults. The palladium of our artistic liberty should be the proud consciousness of having once indulged in the manly luxury of a full-fledged riot over a question of music. Have we the courage to contemplate the shock to the convention of well-bred Anglo-Saxon respectability which would follow should some enthusiastic student in the top gallery cry aloud, even tho with a voice timorously quavering, "A bas, Schoenberg?" Picture, if you have the power of imagination for so wild a flight, the consternation of the ladies, as the ushers debated one with another which should be the one to squelch the iconoclast, who possibly had a bomb and red flag ready to be hurried forth, or even might be a disguised militant. Yet the thrill of pride which would surge thru all of us, when its raalization that at least we, too, might claim admittance to the inner circles of art-loving metropolitan communities, who would not willingly suffer the pain for the glory of it?

We feel sure that Schoenberg himself would heartily approve, for if his music should be received here without an audible ripple he would be convinced that we were either hopelessly behind the times or that he had quite missed his shot. Everywhere else his music has created a riot on its first presentation, Vienna, Berlin, even in London, and shall we permit London to show us the way in such a matter and disappoint a worthy man into the bargain?

Let no man, and no woman, think that we have penned these words lightly or without duly pondering the matter. The time is ripe, the proper reception for the music of Schoenberg, as determined by the masters of music etiquette of the old world, has decreed a riot, which is something in the nature of a most elastic word that probably could be stretched in case of need to make a couple of good hisses pass muster, but some form of disturbance there must be which could qualify under the term "riot," or we shall be painfully lacking in our duty to ourselves and our respect for the constituted authorities. Have we the civic moral stamina to rise to the occasion and assert the rights of our city, or will the somniferous circumambiency of Friday afternoon paralyze the heroic daring with the palsy of doubt? If there should be no man we will still rest in the confident hope of the women, for the hour has struck when we should show ourselves a community conscious of its freedom and its duty.—Karleton Hackett in the Chicago Evening Post.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION EISTEDDFOD, SAN FRANCISCO in 1915

$25,000 IN PRIZES

Chief Choral Competition Prize $10,000

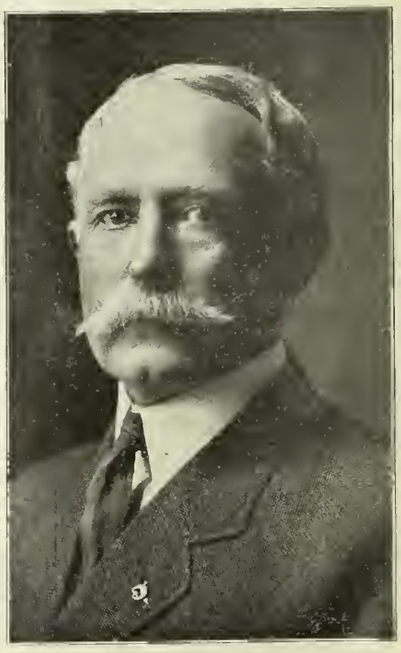
Full list of subjects, prizes, adjudicators, and conditions will be published at an early date in a Preliminary Program, and also announced in the columns of "The Druid" and "Y Drych."

The payment of one dollar will entitle a person to a Certificate of Membership in the Eisteddfod Association, and also to a copy of the Official Program, bound in cloth.

The payment of five dollars will entitle a person to a certificate of membership in the Eisteddfod Association, admission to every meeting and concert of the 1915 Eisteddfod, and also to a cloth bound copy of the Official Program. The five dollars may be paid at one time or by installments of one or more dollars.

For further information, address the general secretary, W. Solomon Jones, Exposition Building, 210 Pine street, San Francisco, Cal.

The above matter, occupying one page of the very handsome program of the International Eisteddfod program at Pittsburgh, attracted much attention and comment.



J. J. MORRIS

Mr. J. J. Morris of Palo Alta was at Pittsburgh for the express purpose of creating interest in the San Francisco event and to him we are indebted for the following comment which is copied from the Palo Alta Tribune:

Palo Alta has been notably recognized in the selection of one of our leading citizens, Mr. J. J. Morris, as a special representative of the International Exposition Eisteddfod Association of San Francisco and the bay cities, to attend the International Eisteddfod which meets in Pittsburgh early in July. The purpose of sending a special representative with unusual authority and discretion is to enlist the co-operation of the world organizations for the greatest musical concourse ever brought together, to meet in San Francisco as a feature of the Panama-Pacific exposition in 1915. For this purpose the California organization is making sweeping plans.

The International Eisteddfod is a historic Welsh institution for the cultivation of the highest excellence in music, literature and art. More especially is Wales the mother home of song. She is celebrated around the world for her choirs and choruses. Wherever a Welsh heart beats in a Welsh bosom there the love of great and grand music finds its home.

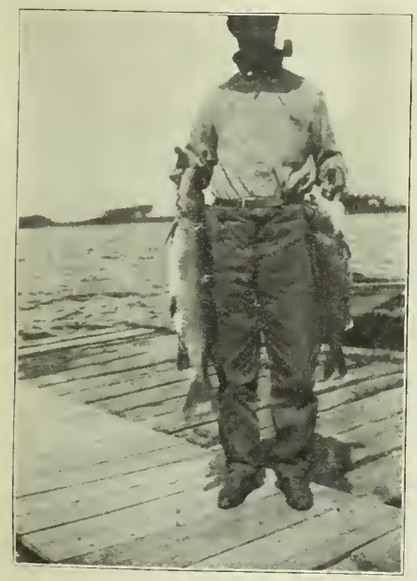
The use of the million-dollar auditorium has been secured for the first week in August, 1915, and we may reasonably expect that the Hon. David Lloyd George, chancellor of the exchequer of the British Empire, will preside over one of the sessions of the International Eisteddfod in token of the contribution of the Welsh people of the world to the history of music.

For the chief choral number mixed voices a prize of $10,000 will be awarded. Numerous other prizes amounting to $25,000 are to be offered for various features. The grand array of competing choruses thus secured will render a concluding oratorio of unapproachable magnificance.

After the Pittsburgh meeting Mr. Morris will visit many of the large cities of the country to secure their co-operation in sending us their picked singers to compete for the grand prize. No higher class of civic advertising could be done by any city than to go in to win such a prize. The rivalry thus stimulated between the cities will do wonders to cultivate tne love of music in the people of the entire country. Out of this meeting will grow the beginning of a permanent grand conservatory of music in San Francisco equal to the best in the western hemisphere. (Advertisement.)

ALBERT BORROFF

The accompanying snapshot shows Albert Borroff, basso, as a fisherman. Mr. Borroff enjoys a fishing vacation every summer in northern Wisconsin. The picture shows that Mr. Borroff is a good "catch," having landed two large fish.



ALBERT BORROFF

Mr. Borroff is preparing for a very busy season, as many important engagements have already been booked for him by Gertrude V. O'Hanlon, under whose management he will be this coming season.

MR. AND MRS. BROCK

The accompanying picture of Mrs. Eudora Moody Brock and Collins Brock was taken in Cleveland, Ohio, last spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Brock are two former Chicago singers who are both advancing rapidly in their profession. They are in the city at present to rehearse with the Chicago Lyric Quartet, with which organization they are to fulfill a long Chautauqua tour.

Mr. Brock has just completed a successful year's work at the Ohio Wesleyan University School of Music and will return to that institution to resume his teaching in the fall.

In addition to his regular work as a vocal

Mrs. Brock, soprano, filled, during the winter, a twenty weeks' concert engagement covering most of the eastern, central and southern states.

GERTRUDE V. O'HANLON NOTES

Gertrude V. O'Hanlon has engaged Marion Green as baritone with her Metropolitan Operatic Quartet.

During the past week Gertrude V. O'Hanlon was in St. Louis, where she booked several of her musical attractions for the coming season.

Mandy.—Miss Elsiemarie Fritz, an assistant in the Mandy Studios, presented her pupils in a piano program at Kimball Hall last Wednesday evening. She was assisted by Harry Beekmann, violinist. Miss Beulah J. Cummings, another assistant teacher, presented her pupils in a program at her home, 623 Highland avenue, on Monday evening.

THEODORA STURKOW-RYDER

Mme. Sturkow-Ryder played at the Indiana State Teachers' Association her fiftieth concert for the season. Some press comment follows:

The Marion Daily Chronicle, June 28.—Madame Sturkow-Ryder is, without doubt, one of the most brilliant pianists ever heard in this city. She plays with a vitality that realizes ideals, and she plays with the temperament of a true artst. . . .

The Marion Leader-Tribune, June 28.—Madame Sturkow-Ryder is one of the most brilliant pianists ever heard in Marion. Splendidly equipped with technical facility that overcomes difficulties of the keyboard with ease, and a musical concept full and rich, she plays with a vitality that realizes ideals. Her playing possesses that elusive something called temperament, which together with her keen mentality, makes her an artist of the first rank. . . .

Music in America

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, WHEATON

The First Baptist Church of Wheaton is certainly fortunate in having the services of Miss Nora Loraine Olin as musical director, for, not only is her musical knowledge wide and varied, but she also is an enthusiast in her dealing with chorus choir and church service, and so it easily comes about that the programs she presents are of absorbing interest and very great value.

On last Sunday evening—in the face of unprecedented heat, the closing musical service of the season drew a large audience and the program offered was exceptional in many phases.

As noted when the choir of this church appeared at the World in Chicago, Miss Olin has developed many fine points in their work. There is a full body of tone, well balanced as to parts and, for a strictly amateur list of singers, the finish is very unusual, the response to shading demands of Miss Olin, and the care expended upon little details being very satisfactory.

On Sunday night there was ample opportunity to enjoy the work of these singers and much variety in the numbers selected, "Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand," by Schnecker, is a good virile number with which to open such a program and at this time it was sung with much distinction, while "Lo, He Descends," by Bullard, is an equally impressive work for ending and on Sunday it was delivered with great brilliance.

The response after scripture reading was West's "Rend Your Hearts," a very attractive little harmonization and a quartet of the choir singers did some excellent work in "Thy Hallowed Presence."

Woodman's "A Song in the Night," is a perfect gem of an anthem—with very neat concerted effects and a fine soprano obligato which was very well sung by Mrs. C. M. Ferry, soprano soloist of the choir, who was heard also to much advantage in various other solo bits and in a duet with Miss Madeline Gallagher.

Mr. Bunnel, the baritone soloist, also had very much to do it the way of solo work and he also accomplished his tasks admirably.

Mr. N. E. Sutcliffe, besides doing the tenor solo parts well, was heard also in his specialty of a saxophone solo, and in this possibility Miss Olin certainly has a big asset for her festivals, as Mr. Sutcliffe has fine taste in making his selections and a rare skill in playing the very difficult instrument.

Mendelssohn's "I Waited for the Lord," was sung better than it has been heard by this writer for many years, the two soprano obligatos being done in exceptionally fine way by Miss Gallagher and Mrs. Ferry, and the chorus evidently having been trained to a nicety of finish which will not often be observed in this tricky number.

Miss Gallagher was the only singer to appear in solo and she certainly afforded the congregation a fine treat in Mendelssohn's "Hear Ye, Israel," for which her voice is fully adequate and which she invested with an extraordinary amount of color and finish.

The lighter passages at the beginning were absolutely pure as to tonal quality and very charmingly modulated while the closing passages were extremely dramatic and were delivered with an astonishing breadth. Altogether an excellent reading.

Miss Olin has at her command a very sweet toned organ and one, too, which has quite sufficient scope for the spaces it is expected to fill. Not only did she play admirable accompaniments for the anthems and other special numbers, but also her hymn pointing was of unusually good quality and her voluntary and postludium were thoroughly good.

The former was a "Prelude" by T. Tertius Noble, and proved to be of a quality and distinctiveness to whet the appetite for more of his composition, while the postlude was a stirring work by Charles Davis Carter.

The work of a director of a volunteer chorus choir is arduous and at times discouraging, but Miss Olin certainly keeps her own enthusiasm and the interest of her singers up to par at all times and the results, as shown last Sunday night, should be gratifying alike to director and singers.

Just Returned from Europe American Conservatory

sweet girl graduate of "Naughty Thirteen" has been, divinely inspired as have been the strains of chorus and orchestra rising to high heaven in the final demonstration, does it not occur sometimes to a serious musician, that it is rather strange how musical programs dominate in these exercises? One might think that they had all been merely schools of music, since in the final analysis, nothing but music is visible. Not that we mind, as musicians, not at all, for from that viewpoint it is rather pleasing that otherwise, but from a merely practical viewpoint, from the standpoint of the student, or even the parent, who has not sent his child to school just to learn music, does it not seem that it might be unsatisfactory, and leaves almost nothing for the schools of music to reveal. Would it not be thought odd, if in a graduation exercise of a school of music, a pupil should get up and demonstrate a problem in geometry? and yet the analogy is practically the same. Music does not manifest but a small part of the work done in the school and therefore, because it is not shown, even in literary efforts to any extent, it is more and more misunderstood, and music less and less appreciated because made so common in this way. One would almost wish for a return of the old-time graduating essay, in which the youthful writer claims to know the way to all known and unknown reforms. It is merely a suggestion, a subject for thought among musicians, as to whether or not we may always be satisfied to be the adjunct to other work, or whether or not we will ever step out upon the merits of our art and declare its independence.

But the music was good, and it accomplished its ultimate object of giving pleasure, and it will long be remembered by those who worked so faithfully for its consummation.

The High School Class, assisted by the Glee Club and Messrs. Utt and Fuller, with Mrs. Schouten as contralto, gave "The Crusaders" in the Assembly Room of the High School, in a manner altogether creditable to professionals, under the able direction of Professor H. C. Hayden. Another program was given at the Opera House, including many excellent selections on the evening of the graduation exercises, following the performance of "The Crusaders." The High School Orchestra assisted and won much praise for their excellent work.

The commencement exercises at St. Peter's School also consisted of musical programs, but also some excellent addresses, the class being addressed by the Rt. Rev. Father Gillespie. The music was in charge of Mrs. J. T. Furlong and Mrs. Ella Marder.

In an address to the graduates of St. Mary's Academy at Nauvoo, Ill., where the music was under the direction of the writer, the speaker of the day, the Rev. Father O'Brien of Chicago, gave to music its full due in an excellent panegyric, outlining its particular value from an educational standpoint and its effect upon the physical life.

At St. Mary's Academy here the exercises were also marked by the rendering of beautiful programs, showing splendid work in this line.

And so, the "good-by's" said, there must be silence from our pen for a short time, because of the absolute nothingness during the summer, but fate is kind, and the coming meeting of the National Association of Organists at Ocean Grove is full of promise, perhaps at that important function, we may meet "face to face" as there is nothing else promised for the season that is so gratifying as the work mapped out by that body at its approaching convention, for it seems that in this case, "One swallow does make a summer." MRS. E. B. SUMMERS.

SAENGERFEST IN SYRACUSE

The seventh Saengerfest of the Central New York Saengerbund was held in this city June 16, 17 and 18. The event opened with a concert in the Arena Monday evening by the grand chorus of 800 men under the able direction of Festival Conductor Albert Kuenzlen. Only he who has participated in the great song festivals in the fatherland can fully enter into the spirit of such an occasion or he who has been enthused by the spontaneous bursts of song at one of those great festivals can really know of the joy and feeling of comradeship which fills their hearts with song.

It is to be regretted that the American public takes so little interest in male chorus singing. The only attempt we make in this direction is our college glee clubs, but as these usually sing to amuse rather than to entertain and educate, their programs are made up largely of light and often trashy songs. There are, to be sure, a few organizations of men who seriously study the better songs for male voices and give fine renditions in public performances, but their number is small.

The great wealth of German part songs for male voices remain a sealed book, not only to the public but to musicians as well, but few of whom take advantage of such a feast as was brought to our very doors at this festival.

The throng of thousands which crowded the arena was composed largely of the Germans of our city and surrounding towns and a more enthusiastic and appreciative audience it would be difficult to muster.

The following program was rendered:

Die Ehre Gottes ..... Beethoven
Massenchor mit grossem Orchester
Arie "Dich theure Halle" aus "Tannhauser" .. Wagner
Mme. Marie Rappold
"Vergessen" ..... Reuter
Massenchor a capella
Overture "Tannhauser" ..... Wagner
Orchester
"Uun leb wohl, du kleine Gasse" ..... Silcher
"Wenn alle Brunnlein fliessen" ..... Baldamus
Maennerchor a capella
Prelude "Le Deluge" ..... Saint-Saens
Violin solo, Mr. Nahan Franko
Aria, "Vissi d'arte" aus "La Tosca" ..... Puccini
Mme. Marie Rappold
Suite "Peer Gynt" ..... Grieg
"In the Morning"
"Asa's Death"
"Anitra's Dance"
"In the Halls of the Mountain King"
Orchester
"Aennchen von Tharau" ..... Silcher-Lorenz
"Am Rhein" ..... Engelskirchen
Mannerchor a capella
"Ave Maria" aus "Feuerkreuz" ..... Max Bruch
Mme. M. Rappold
"Lenzsturm" ..... Brueckner
Massenchor mit Orchester

Every Chorus Number a Masterpiece

The renditions showed most careful preparation on part of the individual societies and a fine ensemble. The accuracy of attack, beautiful tone, intelligent phrasing and clear enunciation made the chorus as one great instrument upon which the conductor played with consummate skill, producing such beautiful tone pictures as will not soon be forgotten and should act as a stimulus for future work and a model for other organizations and conductors.

Orchestra and Soloists

The orchestra under Franko did very excellent work, especially in the Wagner numbers and also in the Peer-Gynt suite. As a soloist Mr. Franko produced a very good tone though his performance bordered on the sensational and impressed one with its being a novelty rather than with excellency of execution.

Mme. Marie Rappold was well received by the audience. She possesses a sweet and well trained voice which showed to splendid advantage in the "Tannhauser" numbers as well as in the Bruch number.

The Prize Contest

The prize contest was held Tuesday 2 p. m. at the Bastable. The contestants were divided into three groups according to numerical strength, giving the smaller societies equal opportunity with the larger. Each class sang one known song and one which was announced to them just before the contest.

Class I. sang Sanger's "Stern der Meeres," a composition, bristling with difficulties as to phrasing, changing harmonies and dramatic expression. The second number was Eschenbach's "Vergessen," the tenderness and pathos of which was well calculated to thoroughly test the singer's ability in the interpretation of the Love Song. Seven societies contested.

Class II. sang Max Schuett's "Horch es hallen Kirchen glocken." This number offers some real contrapuntal difficulties. The second number was Engelkirchen's "Am Rhine," a favorite with all Maennerchors. Seven societies entered this class.

Class III. had only three contesting societies. They sang "Im Lanschigen Wald" and "In der Ferne." This class was composed of small groups, but did excellent work and was not lacking in enthusiasm.

All the numbers in the contest were done a cappella and with very few exceptions the work was absolutely true in intonation, the delicate harmonic coloring was clearly and in some instances, forcefully brought out, the phrasing elegantly done and the enunciation left nothing to be desired.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The last four weeks of the college year were rich in musical feasts at the University. At Crouse College there were piano recitals, vocal recitals and recitals of miscellaneous programs. At the Teachers' College the piano and vocal students of the normal music course gave a recital. This was an innovation which met with general favor.

The Commencement Concert

The musical feature to which all interested look forward with great expectancy, are the two commencement concerts. The individual numbers and their rendition were of the usual high standard for which they are noted. Especially strength is shown in the piano department, all the players showed the results of careful exacting instruction. Space forbids any further comment. The programs, minus the orchestral section, which did splendid work in accompanying the concertos, is here appended:

Organ, Fantasie-Sonata in F minor ..... Neuhoff
Mr. James Robert Gillette, Syracuse
Piano, Fantasie Hongroise .....Liszt
Miss Louise Parsell, Auburn

The last of the series of recitals given by the Wheaton Musical Institute was held Thursday evening, June 19, at the City Hall, Elsie Cromer giving the program. She was assisted by Miss Ora Smith and Miss Grace Mills, pupils of Nora L. Olin.

It was a beautiful program, beautifully given. Perhaps the most enjoyable numbers were the Sonata by Mozart and Rondo Capriccioso, by Mendelssohn. "The Wand of Youth," a charming group of pieces by Elgar, were also much enjoyed.

It is always a pleasure to hear the work of Miss Olin's pupils, but it seemed as though they never appeared to better advantage than on this occasion. They sing with such ease, clear enunciation and beautiful tone that it is a joy to any listener.

These recitals have all been very successful and have shown plainly Mr. Bartholomew's splendid ability as a teacher.

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MUSIC LINCOLN, NEBRASKA

The 1913 catalog of the University School of Music, which is just off the press, discloses a number of distinctive innovations proving the well known up-to-datedness of this large western institution. Of quite particular importance is the establishment of the

Teachers' Training Department

It is well known that the graduate without practical experience is seriously handicapped when seeking a position in competition with the experienced teacher. Heretofore the only way for the graduate to get experience was to go out and teach, using his or her best judgment as to the proper methods to be employed in gaining results. The teachers' training department will have many advantages over the old way, inasmuch as the teaching will be conducted under the personal supervision of the heads of the various departments. Seniors will attend lectures in pedagogy and will receive practical instruction in the very best methods. The University School of Music will register, free of charge, enough talented beginners between the ages of eight and twelve years, to furnish forty hours of training per year to all who wish to enter this course.

Another department of the greatest promise, judging from last year's results, is the

which is under the supervision of John T. Prince, Jr. Mr. Prince conducts courses in dramatic art, dramatic, lyceum and Chatauqua reading, interpretation of lyrics, dramatic criticism, drama study, study of dramatists and stage deportment. This year's dramatic class appeared in the following plays:

"The Record," by Rachel Crothers.
"In Honor Bound," by Sidney Grundy.
"Paid in Full" (act 1), by Eugene Walter.
"A Happy Pair," by S. Theyre Smith.
"The Other Woman," by Ellis Kingsley.
"Petticoat Perfidy," by Sir Charles L. Young.
"The One Chance," by J. T. Prince, Jr.
"The Marble Arch," by Rose and Garroway.
"Girls" (acts 1 and 3), by Clyde Fitch.

A very important feature of the pianoforte department which has been "tried out" during the last school year with eminent results, are the conducted by Mr. Sidney Silber. These classes are open only to post-graduates of the School of Music, or of other schools of equal rank. The work consists of exhaustive discussion, criticism and demonstration on the part of Mr. Silber, special coach work for entire individual programs of members, and a study of comparative interpretation of standard repertory works. The session covers a period of two hours per week.

The School of Music has established a and procures positions for its graduates on payment of a nominal fee.

Teachers' Agency

Another feature of importance to western music clubs is the establishment of an through which means clubs are enabled to procure first class attractions by the faculty members without paying agents' fees, etc.

The artist course presented the following attractions: Rudolph Ganz, Clarence Eddy, Sidney Silber, Jaroslav Kocian, Mrs. Lura Schuler Smith and Carl Frederic Steckelberg, in chamber music recital; Alice Widney Conant, soprano; Mme. Schumann-Heink, Eugene Ysaye, Francis Allen Wheen, tenor; Alessandro Bonci and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

BOSTON

Monday, June 23, the class day exercises of the New England Conservatory of Music were held in Jordan Hall. Over sixty were given diplomas by Director George W. Chadwick. The president of the senior class, Miss Helen M. Fair of Saltzburg, Pa., gave an address of welcome and presented a sum of money to the conservatory to be used for buying books for the school library. This gift came from the graduation class.

The class historian was Frank V. Russell, and the presentation of gifts was by Miss Claire Oakes.

In place of the usual class prophecy, a two-act play, an original comedy prepared by the class and given under the direction of Clayton D. Gilbert, the dramatic department head, assisted by Theodore Kock, was given by class members. The senior class orchestra members furnished music, and the class song, written by Miss Louise C. Rinehart, closed the exercises.

Chairman Margaret Gere, Northampton, Mass.; Clara E. Ingham, Brighton, Ia.; Margaret C. Wing, Waterville, Me.; Ruth L. Etchett, Melrose, Mass.; Margaret A. Kent, South Boston; Elizabeth C. Sise, West Medford; Maurice M. Mathews, Berwick, Me.; Joseph G. Derrick, Springfield, Mass., were the class day committee.

Director Faelten at Augusta

Carl Faelten, director of the Faelten Pianoforte School, gave a piano recital in Penney Memorial, Tuesday night, June 17, as a compliment to Miss Emily Burbank, a pupil of the school, and her class in Augusta, before a large and delighted audience; in fact, the seating of the large audience delayed the recital a quarter of an hour.

From the Kennebec Journal of Wednesday, June 18, the story is interestingly told. The program comprised the following selections:

Novelette, Op. 21. No. 1.....Schumann
Theme and Variations, Op. 142, No. 3.....Schubert
Rondon Presto from Op. 24.....Weber
Sonate Characteristique, Op. 81
Les Adieux
L'Absence } .....Beethoven
Le Retour
Polonaise, Op. 26, No. 1
Nocturne, Op. 55, No. 1
Valse, Op. 64, No. 2 } .....Chopin
Ballade, Op. 47
Barcarole, Op 45.....Rubinstein
Polonaise, No. 2.....Liszt

Director Faelten adopts a different method from the majority of male manipulators of the ivory keys. His method is sincerity and simplicity itself, as was noted from the start of Schumann's virile "Novelette." Here was an opportunity to impress by nervous action. Instead, the performer seemed to seek simply the interpretation of the music.

Mr. Faelten, in appearance and manner, suggests a prosperous business gentleman. He wears his hair short. There is nothing sensational in his action. He plays with inspiration and yet reserve.

His touch is exquisite and true and his pedal work in harmony with these traits. It is his business and he makes a serious business of the music, but he truly and grandly brings out the author's ideas. He is a master as well as student of the masters!

Throughout the program—a difficult one for any musician—he executed without notes. The rack was empty.

While in the Novelette the work was on the heavy tones, the Schubert Theme with its variations was largely upon the northeast end of the keyboard. Schubert's delicacy of harmony, the trills and runs suggested the singing of birds in the summer morning or the brooks in the forest hills.

In Weber's Rondo, the harmony was more imaginative and difficult, necessitating instrumental gymnastics, but every note and rest was true, the master's instrumentation and conception complete. It met with warm appreciation from this audience of Augusta's musical culture.

"The Farewell," "The Absence and Return" of Beethoven in its three movements, was magnificently done. You could hear the German "Fare You Well" in the opening notes and the character interpretation could be followed by the ear as the eye follows the painter's brush. In the Andante and Allegretto movements the thought of Beethoven was musically painted.

"The Return" suggested a deuce of a time in the castle home!

Space forbids details of the whole, the daintiness and delicacy of the Chopin selections and the brilliancy and dash of the number from Rubinstein,—and the jolly, superb, soul-lifting Polonaise No. 2 of Liszt, with which the recital came to its end.

It was a magnificent recital, Herr Faelten.

And Mein Herr appreciated his audience, as they did him—and gave it his very best.

The Boston Opera

Those subscribers who made up the guarantee fund of $150,000 for the Boston Opera Company for the season of 1912-13, have received refunds of 10 per cent of the amount of their subscriptions. Only $133,898.41 has been expended during the season, so that there is an unused balance of $16,101.59. After the return of the 10 per cent, $15,000—$1,101.59 less than 1 per cent—is held to the credit of the subscribers for future dividends.

It is announced that the principals of the Century Opera Company, Milton Aborn, director, and those of the Boston Opera Company, Henry Russell, director, may be exchanged at various times during next season. Elizabeth Ansden, prima donna soprano of the latter company, is the only individual named. She will appear at the Century Opera House during the first weeks of the season.

Felix Weingartner will conduct at the Boston Opera House for a much longer period the coming season that he did last year. He is the most important principal yet engaged.

Personals

Frank E. Doyle, one of Boston's younger vocal teachers and baritones, illustrated a talk given before the Lucia Chapter, Daughters of the Revolution, by W. P. Tryon, music critic of the Christian Science Monitor, by singing songs of the Revolution by Billings, and as a contrast, songs by the English composer, Purcell, the principal one being "From Love's Sickness to Fly."

Mr. Doyle spoke on "Music and the Newspapers," to the Boston Society of Proofreaders, recently, and illustrated his talk with appropriate songs.

Miss Edith Martin, whose specialty is the harp, has decided to make Boston her permanent home. Her studio is at 29 St. James avenue, where, after her vacation during July and August at Stony Creek, N. Y., she will teach her favorite instrument, as well as piano. She will also fill concert engagements as soloist for both instruments. Miss Martin is a graduate of the Vienna Music Conservatory and studied the harp with Professor Anton Zamara, forty years at the conservatory; harmony with Robert Fuchs, and singing with Professor Forster. Before she went abroad her harp instructor was the late Professor Schuecker of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the same time studying piano with Caryle Petersilea, and violin with Julius Eichberg. She is personally acquainted with Alfred Holy of the Imperial Opera and Philharmonic Orchestra, who has been chosen to succeed Heinrich Schuecker as harpist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Paula Mueller, piano teacher, gave an interesting pupils' recital, in Steinert Hall, Wednesday night, June 25. Her program consisted of over thirty pieces, and these represented many composers, among which were Wagner-Liszt, Weber, Proch-Beyer, Sidney Smith, Chopin, Lange and Wieniawski.

Mr. John Orth, the well known piano teacher, will spend his summer at Cape Cod; in Maine; Dover, Mass., and in Nova Scotia.

CEDAR FALLS, IOWA

The eighteenth annual convention of the Iowa State Music Teachers' Association held in this city last week was a great success. The programs prepared for the several sessions were varied in character and brought forward the best musical talent of Iowa, both in the work presented by the pupils and by the members.

The president, Dr. Ernest A. Leo, of Cedar Rapids, was prompt in his calls to order and kept everything moving at a pace that means accomplishment and brings out the best there is in a convention personnel. He was re-elected.

The vice president elected for the coming year was Professor James P. Moorhead of Fairbank; the secretary and treasurer was Mrs. Hilda M. Matthey, of Davenport, who was re-elected for another term. Professor C. A. Fullerton of Cedar Falls was elected member of board of directors, as was also Professor Gustav Schoettle of Iowa City. Muscatine was selected for the next convention, and Charles F. Grade of Muscatine was named as local chairman. The committee to serve on investigation of college music course is; H. W. Maltack, Grinnell; George L. Pierce, Grinnell; C. A. Fullerton, Cedar Falls; O. A. Morse, Sioux City; Gustav Schoettle, Iowa City.

The two principal outside attractions were the distinguished pianist, Alfred Calzin of Chicago, who delighted his audience, while Clarence Eddy, the world renowned organist, drew enthusiastic applause from his audience as he played on the $20,000 pipe organ recently installed at the state teachers' college.

The Cedar Falls Concert Band gave a splendid open air concert as a courtesy to the visiting musicians. Mrs. W. E. Frederickson was the local chairman and as a violinist Frederick Heizer of Sioux City, made a fine impression. Pupils of Miss Elsie Lincoln, Fort Dodge, of Professor G. W. Samson, Jr., Waterloo; Kenneth E. Runkel, Waterloo; of Mrs. Frederick Heizer, Sioux City; Mrs. R. Case, Muscatine; of Georgiella Lay, Waterloo, and others, were contributors to the splendid programs.

All of the principal cities of Iowa had representations here and the city gave the usual courtesies both socially and in automobile drives, etc. To mention each one who gave pleasure either by voice or instrument would tax the pages of even the generous Music News.

The organ recital by Clarence Eddy had the following program:

Toccata in F Major ..... Bach
Fantasia in D flat, Op. 101 ..... Saint-Saens
"Finlandia" ..... Sibelius
(Tone poem for orchestra, arranged for the organ by H. A. Fricker)
Theme, Variations and Finale ..... Thiele

MISS ELLA CLARK'S RECITAL

Once each year Miss Ella M. Clark presents her La Grange class in a piano program, and this event has grown to be one of the important functions of the early summer each season

On last Monday evening there was a very large audience present at the Congregational Church to assist in this affair, to applaud the youngsters enthusiastically and to inform Miss Clark emphatically that they consider her work thoroughly successful.

Assistance was given in this concert by Katherine Wheeler Cullen, a much liked reader, and Mr. Alfred Goldmann, a young violinist, who has lately come to Chicago and whose work is of a quality to insure the fact that it will be heard often. He was accompanied by Ida Kenman Scheef.

Chief interest centered naturally in the pupils of the class, however, and Miss Clark is to be congratulated heartily on the assurance and the skill with which each number was performed.

Every pupil displayed good technic and good interpretative taste, and every one gave evidence of careful teaching throughout the year and of most exact preparation especially for this concert.

The subjoined program will indicate the value of the numbers chosen and also will show the impossibility of giving detailed mention of each pupil. It is perfectly fair, however, to say a special word about a few of those who are perhaps the more advanced and who in every case deserve something more than general commendation.

Eva Whitney and Inez Morrow interpreted their numbers very skilfully, and the duet by Mildred Johnson and Karin Westphal was also very well done, indeed.

Emily Davidson maintained good tone and good rhythm, while Frances Leffler in her solo number was brilliant and played, with Helen Vial, a very excellently prepared duet. Nellie and D'Elda Page proved themselves very thorough students and very musical little girls in their clear playing of their duet.

AT THE MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

The program of Chicago composers' songs at the MacBurney Studios on last Monday evening attracted the largest audience which has yet been present at this series and much enthusiasm was manifested.

Mrs. Agnes Hansel-Harter, contralto, was in fine voice and her luscious voice was very effective in Andersen's "Mary," which song met with much favor, as did also the very likable work of Frank Waller.

The four contralto songs by William Lester proved particularly pleasing, especially the two cradle songs which have just been published, the really exquisite poems to these being by Mary Louise Davidson, who has also written several sacred poems which have been set to music by Mr. Lester and are just now fresh from the press.

Mrs. Lester at this time quite outdid herself. Her voice has been growing at a wonderful rate and she has acquired great skill in using it to the most artistic advantage. The Carpenter "Go Lovely Rose" was a beautiful example of flowing legato, round and pure, with a well contrasted middle section.

The Freer songs were very much liked, indeed, and truly when such splendid examples of the composer's art are in hearing and they are done with such extraordinary finish as at this time no other result could possibly be expected. They are splendid songs and were splendidly sung.

The Waller song had a well sustained melodic flow and the Johnson opus provided a virtuosic close to the first group.

The group of Lester songs were well contrasted in content and style. "Compensation," which had its first public hearing, has a continuity of melodic flow with an effective accompaniment. "As a Perfume" is of more intense nature, leading naturally to the passionate "It Was Not in the Winter," the brilliant rendition of which brought much applause.

"Apple Blossoms" proved to be one of the most singable of the Lester creations and was the greatest favorite at this time. It proved also to be an excellent foil to the last number, which is dashing and light-hearted and requires much virtuosity of treatment. The lyric for this and eighteen other of the Lester songs was provided by S. Marion Becker, a magazine writer, whose work is charming. The program in full was as follows:

WORCESTER, MASS.

The Millbury celebration of its incorporation into a township in June, 1813, was begun Sunday, June 9, by special services in the churches in the morning, and in the afternoon by a special grand concert.

Mrs. C. B. Perry, who had charge of the musical program for the centennial ball concert, in the Town Hall, Monday night, June 9, had charge of the music at the Unitarian Church, and the following program was given by Mrs. Perry, contralto; Mrs. Frank W. Chaffin, pianist; Frederick Blair, 'cellist, of Boston; W. A. Anthony, organist, of Worcester: "The Meditation" from "Thais" (Massenet) was played as a trio, the arrangement being by Mr. Blair; and a "Sarabande" by Handel, arranged by Mr. Blair, was also given by the trio; Mrs. Perry contributed "O Heavenly Father" (E. L. Cramer), adapted from the "Ave Maria," arranged by Mrs. Perry and accompanied by the trio.

Chaffin's orchestra, nine players, of Worcester, with Frank W. Chafin, cornet soloist and leader; Frederick Blair, Boston, 'cellist, and Mrs. Frank W. Chaffin, pianist and accompanist, gave the following program at the concert before the Centennial ball: "Gladiator's Farewell" (Blankenberg), excerpts from "Tannhauser" (Wagner), a cornet solo, "Inflammatus, Stabat Mater" (Rossini), Mr. Chaffin; "Annette Waltz Moderato" (Blair), violin, 'cello and piano, a first production of this work; violoncello soli, (a) "Cantilena" (Goltermann), (b) "Elfentanz" (Popper), Mr. Blair.

Tuesday morning and in the afternoon there were concerts by the Millbury Cadet Band, and in the evening Battery B Band from Worcester gave a program at Bramanville, a part of Millbury. Wednesday at 9 o'clock there was a trades and historic parade, and the Worcester Brass Band, Millbury Cadet Band, and Salem Cadet Band participated. At 11 o'clock the laying of the cornerstone of the new High School took place and the Worcester Brass Band was in attendance. In the afternoon at 2 o'clock there were an automobile parade (sight-seeing for guests), athletic sports at Riverside Park, where the Worcester Brass Band furnished music; at 3:30 the Salem Cadet Band gave a concert at the Square, and at 5 o'clock there were anniversary speakers at the Common. In the evening at 6 o'clock there was a banquet at the Town Hall, a band concert by the Salem Cadet Band at Riverside Park at 7 o'clock, and the Centennial closed with fireworks at 9:30.

Ex-President William H. Taft was a guest of honor during the celebration, Millbury being the home of his maternal aunt, Miss Delia Torrey, whom he frequently visits and with whom he spent many vacations in his boyhood.

Another Musical Course Next Season

An announcement of the Star concert course, with Charles F. Hanson, local manager, has just been received. It will be given in Mechanics' Hall, beginning in December, with Mme. Frances Alda, soprano; Gutia Casini, Russian 'cellist; Frank La-Forge, pianist, the artists.

This will be followed by a January concert, with Eugene Ysaye, violinist, and Rosa Olitzka, Russian contralto, the program givers; a concert in February, Alice Nielsen, soprano, and Leopold Godowsky, pianist, appearing; another in March, John McCormack, Irish tenor, and Gertrude Manning, lyric soprano, on the stage; and the fifth and last in April will present William Hinshaw, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Jean Gerardy, the great 'cellist.

Mr. Hanson offers special prices to public school teachers, the regular tickets being $4, $5 and $6.

Normal School Graduation Music

June 17 the Worcester State Normal School graduation was held and Musical Director Edward L. Sumner arranged an excellent program which was finely given by the school chorus, 200 voices; the senior and junior glee clubs, thirty voices; and Fred L. Mahn, violinist; R. Nagel, 'cellist; P. Mimart, clarinetist; L. Kloepfel, trumpeter, from the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Leroy L. Muzzy, pianist, and Charles A. Grosvenor, tenor, both of this city.

The "Martha" overture (Flotow) opened the musical part of the exercises. This was followed by "Doris" (Nevin), sung by the full chorus; "Repentance" (Gounod), arranged by Mr. Sumner for the full chorus; "An Indian Mountain Song" (Cadman), in which the senior and junior glee clubs united; "Italian Serenade," the solo being sung by Mr. Grosvenor, accompanied, first by the clubs, then by full chorus; "Entr' acte" (Hellmesberger), the orchestra; "Thy Love as a Father" "Redemption" (Gounod), Mr. Grosvenor and glee clubs; and "Unfold Ye Portals" (Gounod-Ross Hilton), given by the ensemble.

Recitals

Walter W. Farmer, piano and organ teacher, gave pupils' recitals in Salisbury Hall, Wednesday and Thursday nights, June 18 and 19. The class was assisted by Mrs. Mabel MacGowan, soprano; Mrs. Bertha G. Denny, contralto; Miss Sylvia Fish, violinist; W. Wilmont Aldrich, baritone.

The forty-first annual musicales of the Worcester County Music School, Edward L. Sumner, director, were held in Pythian Hall Saturday afternoon, June 21; Monday and Tuesday nights, June 23 and 24, at 8 o'clock. As usual, these recitals were largely attended and much interest was shown by the audience.

Fred W. Bailey gave a pupil's recital in Piedmont Church, where he is organist and director, Monday night, June 30.

Last fall he opened the Worcester Virgil Pianoforte School with Miss Grace B. Davis assistant, and has met with flattering success.

CLEVELAND

The Philharmonic String Quartet gave three concerts at Channing Hall, assisted by Mrs. Sol Marcosson and Miss Grace Benes, pianists. The quartet is composed of Messrs. Sol Marcosson, Charles Hychlik, James Johnson and Charles Heydler.

The male chorus of the Y. M. C. A. conducted by George Protheroe, gave a concert at Engineer's Hall, May 21. Miss Lila Robeson, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, was the soloist. Mr. James Johnston, violinist, also assisted. R. J. Crocker and Mildred Johnston, accompanists.

Marinus Salomons gave a farewell piano recital May 29. He sailed June 3 for an indefinite stay in Europe.

Mr. Felix Hughes gave two pupils' recitals at the Hotel Statler, May 26 and 29.

The pupils of J. R. Hall, pianist, assisted by Mrs. Hall and Miss Grace Peet, vocalists, gave an afternoon recital at the Hotel Statler, June 13.

William Saal, voice teacher, presented his pupils in a recital at the Athletic Club the afternoon of June 11.

Walter Logan's pupils gave a violin recital at the Metropolitan Theater, on the afternoon of June 24. They were assisted by Ethel Leyinska, pianist, and Mrs. Frederick Avery, soprano.

Mrs. Frances Korthener presented her piano pupils in a recital at Channing Hall, June 9.

Rita Elandi, soprano, gave her annual pupils' recital at the Colonial Club, the evening of June 30.

The Municipal Band concerts, conducted by Christian Timner, will be the only musical attractions in Cleveland this summer.

MINNEAPOLIS

The eleventh season of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will open Friday evening, October 24, with Putnam Griswold, baritone of the Metropolitan Opera of New York, as soloist. The home season will cover a period of twenty-three weeks, consisting of twelve Friday evening symphony concerts, twenty-one Sunday afternoon popular concerts, and six young people's concerts, the latter under the auspices of the Young People's Symphony Concert Association.

Among the artists so far engaged for the symphony concerts are, Johanna Gadski, soprano; Putnam Griswold, baritone; Fritz Kreisler, Mischa Elman, Richard Czerwonky, violinists; Teresa Carreno, Katherine Goodson and Harold Bauer, pianists, and Cornelius van Vliet, 'cellist.

The eastern tour of the orchestra, which is now an annual event, will open at Milwaukee, February 21, and will probably embrace the same cities as in the past. At conclusion of the home season the eighth annual spring tour will provide an additional ten weeks', making the total season of the orchestra, thirty-three weeks.

DENVER

The first concert of the Cavallo Symphony Orchestra at Lakeside the afternoon of June 13, attracted a large audience.

The opening number the delightful "Vorspiel" to "Haensel and Gretel," charmed the audience with its suggestion of forests and fairies.

In the soloist, Henri Scott, basso of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, was a choice that was altogether pleasing. His first selection, recitative and air, "Tarabour Major" from the opera "La Caid," Thomas, showed a voice of fine breadth, rich and smooth. Following this was a group of English songs delightfully done. Our well known young and excellent musician, Lary Whipp, accompanied for this group.

The symphony chosen for the afternoon was Raff's "Leonore."

The new concert-master, Alexander Saslavsky, concert-master of the New York Symphony Society, is a fine accession to the Denver Orchestra.

On the afternoon of June 20 occurred the second concert of the Cavallo Symphony Orchestra at Lakeside.

The Cesar Franck Symphony in D Minor exhibited ensemble work of a high quality.

For a second time the audience was delighted by the presence of Henri Scott as soloist. He has a personality that is truly an asset. His singing of the "Ella giammoi m'amo" from Verdi's "Don Carlos" brought forth tremendous applause. Later he sang three songs (Mr. Whipp, accompanist) in a most finished style. A final encore, "The Sands o' Dee" was a splendidly dramatic number.

The concluding number, "Espana," Chabrier, a wonderfully colorful and brilliant composition for the orchestra, closed a program thoroughly satisfying.

Mr. Louis Persinger, violinist, is soloist for the third concert.

Two performances of "The Pirates of Penzance" were heard at Lakeside June 11 and 12. St. Mark's Musical Club, under the direction of R. Jefferson Hall, presented the opera. Mr. Hall, who is organist at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, is an active and very busy musician, who has more than this one production to his credit. His work always shows careful and painstaking training; decidedly unselfish labor on his part.

Paul Clarke Stauffer presented his little artist pupil, Gertrude Gibson, age ten years, in piano recital the evening of June 19, at the Central Christian Church. Mr. Milnor Gleaves, baritone, assisted.

In the playing of this little girl, small and daintily old-fashioned in appearance and manner, a most striking feature was her lovely poise. Her technic was smooth and delicate and absolutely sure. She possesses a legato that gave to her work an evenness that was delightful.

Her whole program was rendered without notes. In the Chopin "Valse," Op. 64, No. 1, there was a marked surety. "Etude," A Flat Major, Wollenhaupt, was brilliant. The MacDowell numbers were lightly and beautifully interpreted. Interested friends showed their appreciation by the many lovely flowers presented.

Mr. Gleaves' singing was of a most pleasing character. He is a pupil of Percy Hemus of New York. His fine enunciation is an unalloyed delight. One of our favorite Cadman songs, was in the second group rendered—"A Moonlight Song."

At the fifth annual contest for the "Stauffer Essay Medal" recently held, Mrs. L. E. Ripperdan carried off the prize. The subject of her essay was "Haydn, His Life and Works."

Mr. Stauffer will not labor quite so arduously during the summer months as during the winter season. He will be in the studio only during the mornings, Green Gables Studios, 2939 East Colfax avenue.

THE CHARM OF THE WORLD'S ARTISTS—

Is the supreme devolopment among musical instruments—the Starr Piano. The most critical requirements of the musician are abundantly satisfied in this unique instrument. It has been accorded marked preference in the aristocratic homes of America and numbers among its enthusiastic patrons musicians of world-wide renown.

This instrument has attained such a high standing because of its unequaled musical qualities. Its unique, sweet singing tone affords perfect support to the voice and proves a never-ending delight to the pianist. Its artistic design of case, with its superb finish, is as instrumental in endearing it to the hearts of the present generation as it was to those who have passed.

OUR GENEROSITY

(Contributed)

The following was printed lately in several newspapers:

The tribulations of an Italian tenor with the English language are responsible for Milton Aborn losing the service of Signor Farmo, who sings under the name of Fuzati, and is said to be a tenor of as great range and power as Zenatello, and Fuzati is going from the Century Theater to the Chicago Opera Company, under Cleofonte Campanini.

Fuzati was engaged by Mr. Aborn and told to learn "Aida" in English. He practiced one day on English, and at the end found that he couldn't sing in any language, and begged with tears in his eyes to be released from the contract. After two days rest he had a trial by Campanini, and contracts are now being drawn for Fuzati to go to Chicago.

How many Americans go to Italy, and with tears in their eyes try to sing real Italian? Only they are not consoled and told, "Never mind, we'll engage you just the same and you may sing English." This is the difference between Italy and America. When will we begin to be a real art-making country? Never, until our language is universally sung. E. E. F.

GEORGE MORTIMER BRUSH

After spending a year in Chicago, writing for Music News, Mr. Brush has gone to Carbondale, Ill., where he will take up a class in piano playing and also will lecture on "Musical Appreciation." Mr. Brush has had remarkable opportunities for becoming acquainted with repertoire in all departments of music and his knowledge of personalities among musicians is also unlimited.

He is certainly well fitted for the work of a teacher and lecturer and Music News, while sorry to lose him, is certain that his coming to Carbondale will be a great advantage to that community.

AT THE THEATERS

Seldom, indeed, has Chicago reached so low an ebb in theatrical affairs as just now, for the number of attractions on view is amazingly small. However, the quality of these few is much above the usual summer standard and "When Dreams Come True" at the Garrick is as pretty as it is interesting, and "How Much Is a Million" at The Fine Arts Theater is a distinctly novel little entertainment. The "Mlle. Modiste" Company, which has been giving good performances at The Studebaker, has discontinued.

The "Tic Toc Man" at the Grand is playing to capacity, and the mild problem play, "The Blindness of Virtue," is still attracting great attention at McVicker's.

AL FRESCO ENTERTAINMENT

At Ravinia the music is enjoyed by many hundreds who do not formally seat themselves in the pavilion, but who wander about the park listening from many vantage points more or less distant from the stage, and the dancing presented there has an added charm because it is so informal.

At Scammon Gardens during the past week the Coburn Players have been in evidence in a round of classical plays and they have proven to be delightful.

No finer place for al fresco performances could be devised than are Scammon Gardens, and the company is one of superior strength.

In "Romeo and Juliet" the work of the entire cast was a delight and the appropriateness of the outdoor setting, the real moon rising over the tree-canopied stage, and the real voices of the night adding verisimilitude to the scene made of this performance something which cannot be lightly forgotten.

In "Twelfth Night" the company seemed to be in the mood for a genuine (though very refined) frolic and the crisp humor and swift development of this comedy have never received more legitimate treatment.

Mrs. Coburn was charming as "Viola," and Mr. Coburn properly pompous as "Malvolio," while Frank Peters and George Currie adroitly avoided the overdoing of "Toby Belch" and "Andrew Aguecheek," and Kate McLaren as "Maria" was fascinating. The other parts were all taken admirably also, and the ensemble was as near perfect as theatrical performances ever become.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF NORMAL METHODS

MR. DOANE IN ORGAN RECITAL

The man who invented the fiction that there is any good "express service" to Evanston or that there is anything like adequate transportation in the evening hours should be "assigned" to write one concert each week in the university town, and long before two months were up he would be begging to have his appointment changed to Oak Park.

But after interminable waiting for an "Evanston Express" on Monday evening, and a disgustingly slow trip, the North Shore city was reached just as the big storm of that evening broke and the seven or eight blocks to Fisk Hall was accomplished in a downpour and to an electrical accompaniment which was anything but pleasing. Evanston is delightfully shady on a hot summer day and very beautiful also, but on a rainy night the trees simply serve to make the streets dark as pitch and they also act as collectors of water, which is precipitated by the barrelful on the luckless stranger who must traverse the streets.

The approach to Fisk Hall was, on Monday night as dark, for at least two blocks, as though the town were uninhabited, and this added to the sullen roar of the lake and the incessant play of lightning gave the scene much of the appearance of an inferno—a pitch black inferno, occasionally split across by terrifying electrical display.

However, once inside Fisk Hall, all troubles were at an end, and the handful of people there were privileged to hear a program, which, for sheer virtuosity and melting beauty, will be duplicated very few times in a lifetime of concert going.

The scene was eerie. The hall was but dimly lighted and very sparsely populated and the roar of the lake made a continuous basso ostinato throughout the program, and through the windows to the right there were frequent glimpses of a heaving lake, lit up ever and anon by the tumultuous lightning.

Present in the small audience was Evanston's grand old man of music, Mr. Kappes, who, now more than ninety years old, was a friend and colleague of Mendelssohn, and who, seated just beside Mr. Doane, enjoyed the modern music to the full of its splendid beauty, while at the same time he told with reverent gusto of the times out-of-mind that he had heard Mendelssohn himself play the very "Sonata" which Mr. Doane gave such an inspired reading on Monday night. A curious linking of a past age with the present, but all in full accord with the strangeness of the scene and the unusual developments of the night.

Because of the untoward weather and the slight attendance on Monday, this program is to be repeated on next Monday night at Fisk Hall, and if the lovers of fine organ playing in Chicago could know in full what a magnificent player is Mr. Doane and what a glorious program he has prepared, Fisk Hall would not be half large enough to hold the throngs which would crowd thitherward at that time.

Mr. Doane has all the things which we usually describe as part of the virtuoso-organist's equipment. He manages his registrations with such skill that he can build up from gentlest whisper of tone to most thunderous brutality with no appreciable inequalities in the crescendo. He has such extraordinary pedal technic that the most marvelous things are passed over as child's play, and he has an absolute self-possession and a repose which makes his work "Orgelmassig" to the final degree.

But he has more, and it is in this further equipment that he is "different." With very strong hands and plenty of physical power of body, and especially of arm, he yet has a flexibility and a control of relaxation which is seen but rarely and which has been considered generally as necessary to the virtuoso pianist only. As a result of these points he can deliver a crisp scale or a succession of staccato notes with a clarity and a cheerfulness of effect which is almost uncanny; he also can "coax" a melody just as the most expert pianist can do. He knows how to "caress" the keys to the end that they will give up their sweetest possibilities, and he also knows how to "compel" from them every iota of their power. All this, combined with great intelligence in the interpretative thought, combines to make his playing something to watch with delight and to listen to with joy.

His program on Monday consisted of a "Fugue" by Bach, and the D Minor "Sonata" of Mendelssohn as its purely classical parts and with smaller pieces, which were both novel and beautiful, by D'Evry, Wolstenholme, Debussy and Johnson, all of them being played with perfect insight into their poetic meanings, while an arrangement of a slow movement by Goldmark was superb in its sustained legato; and the "Introduction" and "Fugue" from a Reubke "Sonata" was superb in the swirl and the tempest with which it typified the "Ninety-fourth Psalm." Three pieces by Lemare were of intense interest, and as an extra his charming "Cheerfulness" was given also.

The program in full was printed in the last issue of Music News and will be repeated in entirety at Fisk Hall next Monday evening.

CHARLES E. WATT.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

In spite of the heavy rain of Monday evening there was a fair attendance at the University concert at Mandel Hall, and the program given by Miss Mathilde Heuchling, contralto, and Mr. William Beard, baritone, was received with much enthusiasm by the audience.

Miss Heuchling has long since won her place as a contralto with splendid voice and with interpretative ideals which have back of them fine intelligence and abounding imagination, and Mr. Beard is known as one of the most forceful of baritones as well as a singer who possesses much finesse in his dealings with both the classic and the modern schools of song literature.

The Handel numbers were given by him with much authority, the French and German works with entire satisfaction and the songs by Clough-Leighter, Grant-Schaeffer and Hallett Gilberte with rare charm.

Miss Heuchling was insistently intellectual in her greater numbers and brought many fine points of expressiveness to the interpretation of the smaller works, especially enjoyable being the reading of Lulu Jones Downing, Kahn and Metcalf.

The duets at the close of the program capped the climax of a thoroughly enjoyable and consistently progressive program.

Mr. Walter Keller played accompaniments, both at the organ and the piano, and proved himself again a master of the difficult art.

The program in detail was as follows:

Hear Me! Ye Winds and Waves.....Handel
'Tis Worth Observing (Floridante).....Handel
Mr. Beard

Hark! Hark! the Lark.....Schubert

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERTS

The summer night concerts at Warren Avenue Congregational Church so successfully inaugurated last year, were resumed on last Thursday evening, when Miss Alice Ione Cramer, soprano; Mr. Grant Kimbell, tenor; Miss Elena Moneak, violinist, and Miss Electa Austin, pianist, appeared in a well-selected and very artistically presented program, with Mr. Phelps Cowan lending his invaluable aid as accompanist.

Miss Austin appeared first and in the "Scotch Poem" and "Post Wagon" by MacDowell demonstrated a well-developed musicianship which later was coupled with real poesy in the interpretation of two Chopin "Waltzes."

Her second group opened up cheerfully with the Schubert-Liszt "Hark! Hark! the Lark," and ended with virtuosic display in the little played but very effective "Polonaise" in E flat major by Moszkowski.

Miss Austin sits at the piano quietly and she uses her resources with the utmost freedom and perfect control. Her singing tone is notably good and her bravoura work, including brilliant scales and arpeggios, as also the manipulation of forte chords and octaves, is well done.

The Schubert-Liszt piece was played with unusual facility and pleased the audience very much, while the virtuosity displayed in the Moszkowski number resulted in a very insistent encore demand to which Miss Austin replied with an extremely refined reading of the Mendelssohn "Spinning Song."

Altogether, Miss Austin impressed as a young artist who is endowed plentifully with natural gifts and who has worked faithfully and intelligently to develop these gifts.

Her readings are full of poetry and also of spirit, and she has a multitude of good points to endear her to the concert public.

Mr. Kimbell appeared for the second time in this course and the applause which greeted his entrance showed that he had not been forgotten since last year.

He chose first of all the great tenor aria from "La Boheme," and in this displayed vocal attainments of high grade and an intelligence of interpretation which places him well up in the artist class.

His mezzo voce effects were beautiful and his manipulation of dynamics all that could be asked. The quality of the voice was suave throughout and the fitting of tone color to indicated mood of text was fine indeed.

A rollicking German song, "Lauf der Welt," was tossed off with much abandon and brought an encore demand, to which he responded with Cadman's little gem of a song "At Dawning."

The second group opened with the beautifully characteristic "Lolita" by Buzzi-Peccia, in which very clear rhythmic values were maintained, and was followed by "Mary," a Scotch ballad by Richardson, in which the sustained legato was remarkable.

One of the "Bergerettes" by Weckerlin followed, and the group closed with Salter's "Come to the Garden, Love," sung with such spirit and beauty that the audience would fain have heard it again, but were equally delighted with "I Hear You Calling Me," which Mr. Kimbell graciously offered as an encore selection and in which he did some charming singing.

Miss Moneak is a young artist whose tone is of wonderful richness and whose interpretative ideals are of extraordinary worth. She played the difficult "Variations" (Corelli-Tartini-Kreisler) with wonderful crispness and absolutely pure intonation, and in the tricky "Tambourin" by Kreisler she was delightfully exact and produced an infinite variety of shading effect.

The brilliant "Zigeunerweisen" by Sarasate provides an exhaustive test for any violinist, and that Miss Moneak came through it with such extreme success redounds much to her credit and placed her so high in the estimation of the Warren avenue audience that she will certainly be royally welcomed if she appears there again. An encore was played after this number.

Miss Moneak has an extremely pleasing appearance, perfect repose in her work, and to her great technic she has added such a fund of refinement that she is today one of the most pleasing among the younger artists of the city.

The fourth soloist, Miss Cramer, at once gained the support of her audience by the graciousness of her demeanor and the skill with which she had selected her program numbers, and this favor increased to greater and greater proportions as the evening advanced.

Miss Cramer has a beautifully placed and modulated voice, her quality being exquisite especially in the high range. She sings with ease and abandon and is also able to keep her interpretative idea well before her audience at all times.

ALICE IONE CRAMER

She sang an old English song by Brown with delightful simplicity, and in "Mifanwy" by Foerster she displayed power and passion. In Ronald's "Down in the Forest" she gave some most beautiful piano effects and her final high note was delightful, while "Allah," by Chadwick, was of sustained beauty, and the very popular and equally beautiful "Spirit Flower," by Campbell-Tipton, was given with great variety of effect and much beauty of vocalization.

Chaminade's "Dreams" proved to be unique and beautiful, and Rummel's "Ecstasy" put a cap sheaf of delight on the whole program. Miss Cramer's only encore was "The Wind," by Spross, a number in which she excels.

The accompaniments were played with great musicianship and much charm by Phelps Cowan, a player whose technic is very satisfactory and whose musicianship is undoubtedly great.

RECEPTION TO MADAME JOHNSTON-BISHOP

Small wonder that matters move enthusiastically at the Sherwood Music School, with Miss Georgia Kober at the helm. She is concentrated energy and enthusiasm and must carry any number of musical volts and watts about her, so electrical and infectious is her attitude. On Tuesday evening she presented informally her promising pupil, Miss Hazel Raymond, in recital and the atmosphere was charged with all those elements of temperament which Miss Kober possesses and seems to know how to distribute. A studio recital is about the most enjoyable form of musical enjoyment. An exceedingly friendly basis is the one on which performers and audience stand. And the attractive rooms of the school were decorated, and there were flowers and refreshments and fellowship to furnish the materials whereof to build a fine occasion. But Miss Kober added a cap sheaf by introducing to new friends and re-introducing to former acquaintances, Madame Genevra Johnston-Bishop, the sterling artist who has returned to Chicago after a long absence to associate herself with the vocal department of the school. It was genuine pleasure to meet Mrs. Bishop again and find her still animated by the same abounding musical vigor and enthusiasm so peculiarly her own. She was a central figure in the middle west for a number of years and will find a ready and cordial welcome from those who know of her merits, and with her generous spirit and unquestioned ability will find a new circle of admirers waiting her.

Miss Raymond gave her numbers with rare ease and freedom. Her program ran somewhat to the deft and bravoura in style, and in such moments as are furnished by the Poldini "March Mignon" and the brusque "Grotesque" of Sinding, and the "Concert Waltz" of Wieniawski she was delightfully convincing. She is sure and fleet with her fingers and has power in abundance and an excellent sense of rhythm. With Miss Kober at the second piano Saint-Saens' "Dance Macabre" became a dashing bit of brilliancy.

Mr. Herbert Kirschner, a young violinist of fine parts, contributed two groups and several encores. He plays with an unusual intensity and fervor and gave every evidence of rare schooling as well as the pos-

The concert of last Saturday morning introduced Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Butler in the brilliant "Sonata" (York-Bowen), and

HERBERT BUTLER

Mr. Butler was heard also in some of his characteristic violin solos.

Miss Jennie F. W. Johnson sang Downing's cunning "June," and two songs of Ronald, to a good accompaniment by Mrs. Butler.

The most impressive number of the program, however, was Miss Johnson in three of the biblical songs by Dvorak, "Sing Ye a Joyful Song," "God Is My Shepherd" and "By the Waters of Babylon."

These songs by Dvorak are wonderful examples of what may be done with sacred text, entirely away from the hackneyed trend of sacred songs in general, and yet sincere and earnest to the final degree. Miss Johnson—mistress of oratorio and church styles and possessor of a voice of noble power and intense quality—sang these songs beautifully. Nothing finer than the second one is to be imagined.

DAY WILLIAMS IN RECITAL

On last Thursday evening a 'cello recital was tendered to the students of the summer session of the School of Music and College of Liberal Arts of Northwestern University and of the American Institute of Normal Methods.

The soloist of this recital was Mr. Day Williams, who is one of the most musical as well as most technically efficient 'cellists of Chicago, and his accompaniments were played by Mrs. Hila Verbeck Knapp, a pianist of much power and an ensemble player with few equals.

Mr. Williams has presence, poise and splendid technic and, added to this, he has a musical insight into the compositions he plays which enables him to color them with much skill and beauty and to make them of absorbing interest to his audience.

On Thursday he was received with the utmost cordiality and the only criticism heard on his recital from any source was that it was too short by half.

He played two movements of the "Concerto in D" by Haydn with rare acquiescence to its strictly classic mode, and in the Grieg "Sonata," Op. 36, for piano and 'cello, both artists were admirably virile and absolutely modern in technical presentment and interpretative thought.

Mr. Williams also pleased very greatly in a "Rondo" (Boccherini), a charming "Valse Trieste" by Sibelius and a brilliant "Tarentelle" by Popper.

FINE ARTS THEATER

"How Much Is a Million?" still holds forth at the Fine Arts Theater and continues to play to good audiences, which fact can be claimed by but few of the summer theaters. The engagement has been extended. Naturally, there's a reason—the people like the breezy little comedy, always clean in its really clever jokes, and entertaining to an unusual degree. Again the author, C. R. Hopkins and his talented wife, who plays the leading feminine role have made many friends during their stay in Chicago.

BISPHAM IN AUSTRALIA

What matter dull season or busy season in the musical world, David Bispham is sure to be in the lead—up and doing.

Really Bispham is an American institution, and you can't imagine him passive, or quiet or out of the public eye. His energy and activity are assets as invaluable as his intelligent attitude toward, and conception of his art. For David B. is a man of convictions. Really he is more than that—much more. He is a man who has the courage of his convictions.

One of the old Greek intellectuals, whose teachings are as precious today as ever they were when he lived and taught, has told us in so many words that the best—perhaps the only—way to demonstrate a theory, is to illustrate it. To prove your convictions and deductions by an illuminating exemplar.

Well, Mr. Bispham has studied the practical Greek philosopher to advantage, and he has proven to the world that his belief in his own theories is sound and demonstrable. He has an ardent faith in the efficacy of the English tongue as a medium of musical communication; and thus believing, he has made his audiences share his convictions.

If for no other reason than his championship of the mother tongue as an ideal vehicle for the expression of the musical idea, Mr. Bispham deserves well of us—our gratitude plus our respect.

When a man has a practical idea, he is bound to popularize it. He sows a good seed in fertile soil, and a fine up-standing vigorous growth is the result.

How many musical American artists and amateurs realize what Mr. Bispham stands for, and has accomplished in the work alone—sincerely and religiously adhered to—of providing the fluidity, elasticity and ideal adaptability of the vernacular wedded to appropriate measures? A glance at any of his widely and richly varied programs, proves how much he has accomplished and is still doing.

But Mr. Bispham is not only the prophet of English as she should be spoken and ought to be sung, he is a master of a broad field of interpretation; a vigorous delivery of the diction of his choice, or those other languages claimed by the vocalists as perfection; a devoted student of style and meaning in phrase; an ardent exponent of the broad and vigorous as well as the poetically subtle in sentiment.

Americans have long since learned to regard him as a product to be specially proud of, and Americans will enjoy the stimulation of pride in his conquest of other peoples—even of the cousins in the far-off Antipodes, whither David Bispham has journeyed to give them a taste of his fine, matured, mellow art.

It was, of course, to be anticipated that the famous baritone would create a deep impression in Australia, where his coming especially under the management of so versatile, capable and thorough an impresario as Frederic Shipman—had been the topic of conversation, and the objective of anticipation for many moons before his actual arrival.

The Australians have experienced a novel sensation in becoming acquainted with Mr. Bispham; his personality, and his art, and his championship of the language of the land of his visitation; the country of his birth; the kingdom of the English mother tongue.

Conspicuously prominent was the announcement that Mr. Bispham would sing no songs in the foreign languages. This was emphasized by Mr. Bispham at the reception given in his honor in the city of Sydney. A reception attended by the distinguished and prominent citizens and their wives, including the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress.

Mr. Bispham stated his position in the address he made when he said: "Let us in fostering the best vocal music employ our own tongue in which to sing." Mr. Bispham also urged his hearers to adopt well-selected translations so that audiences might understand the whole of the message it was intended to convey in any given song.

Celeste D. Heckscher in London

The most significant figures in a given movement are often the least obtrusive. Often too modest to thrust themselves forward into that limelight, which makes for conspicuousness and is almost necessary in the swift rush of modern and up-to-date affairs. But those in whom meritoriousness seems inherent are rarely the ones to employ the flamboyant methods of modern schemes for spectacular exploitation.

The poets tell us that "Love will find out the way," but they are silent as to the explorative intuitiveness of genius.

If any body of working artists requires the boost of advertising it is that segment of the inhabitants of the union, who self-styled, are dominated en masse, the "American composer."

The Editor of the New York section of Music News has upon various occasions referred to the claims of the musicians and composers of the Western (northern) hemisphere, and their right to respectful consideration and recognition.

Just a few native composers are able to boast both consideration and recognition on both sides of the Atlantic, and to fill their places with dignity. Among the younger of these is Celeste D. Heckscher, whose music without any of the adventitious "boosts" in the way of sensationalism, has come to be regarded as belonging to an unique school of which she may in a way be considered the leader and protagonist.

She is acquainted with the assimilation of those composite styles which give extreme modern musical compositions the aspect of a carefully-planned harmonic "cubism," and her own style is sufficiently advanced to remind us that she is a keenly-critical and analytical worker, whose skillful hand is guided by common-sense in the manipulation of the technic of her chosen art, as well as imagination. For imagination and common-sense are invariably allied in those works of genius of any of the arts, destined to survive, and perhaps achieve something akin to immortality.

Yet her message is very clear, and not complicated with the extreme figurations whose presence makes us suspect paucity of ideas and dearth of invention. She is one of England's society leaders and great not forced to help herself out with an atrocious arabesquerie of almost inarticulate sounds to aid her in expressing herself. She possesses the poet's lyricism, and with her original message she has the means of an elaborate but not awkward decoration.

Mrs. Heckscher is a composer with convictions. She also possesses the instinct of the refined melodramatist in music; but her measures are never sentimental. Sentiment and an almost pungent poetry she has at her command, but her message is closely and finely wrought, and her meanings travel upon the plane of an almost classic intelligence.

Europe will see and hear much of Mrs. Heckscher within the next few years, and the echoes of her music will reach us here. At present she is domiciled in England. Not too near the metropolis to be caught in the vortex of its excitement, yet near enough to see an occasional pilgrim bent upon reverently bowing before the woman whose skill and ability gave us the delicious "Dances of the Pyrenees," and who possesses a delightful element of individuality throughout her musical creativeness.

Stella Barre Leaps to Fame

The immediate circle of Stella Barre's friends and acquaintances—and as attractive a society girl as Miss Barre, beautiful and talented, would, it is needless to say, enjoy an exceptional popularity—were interested in discovering just what career that charming young woman would eventually decide to adopt, whereby an unsuspecting world might become acquainted with the wonder of her phenomenal upper tones as well as her lovely voice.

In the past the lovely Stella sang at few public functions, restricting her efforts to musicales, concerts and entertainments of a private and semi-private nature, meanwhile continuing the development of her voice, and the study of operatic repertoire with her teacher, (who happens to be the Editor of the New York Section of Music News); and as her teacher believes in an adequate apprenticeship to the art of her choice, and an honest endeavor to aim for the top where there is so much space and so few to stand thereon, Stella Barre pursued her studies quietly, and with the diligence and concentration a sine qua non in the acquisition of the vocalist's difficult art.

However, a connoisseur of parts, who has assisted in the launching of not a few stage favorites, chanced to hear the youngest phenomenal coloratura soprano in the world, sing and making himself known, promptly insisted upon her making trial of musical comedy as a field of endeavor, and she an artist all of whose aspirations were centered upon the operatic stage, and the debut her teacher was planning for her in a foreign opera house, when her allotted number of operas should have been assimilatd.

This connoisseur, not unknown in the world of journalism, and whose dicta go generally uncontradicted, suggested a brief season in vaudeville as a preliminary step to greater things.

Thus a few weeks ago, billed in biggest type as "Adrienne" our petite prima donna, Stella Barre, got her first bearings, and incidentally her first big vaudeville applause in a well-known New York vaudeville house.

Her appearance at the winter garden and a week of vaudeville attracted the attention of several managers who offered her flattering inducements.

It was probably the lure of Broadway which finally decided Stella Barre, and she accepted an engagement with Lew Fields' "All Aboard" Musical Comedy, where she has appeared and has been heard singing G's and A's in alt the last few nights. More of her anon.

Bachaus to Return to America

A bright particular star of next season's concerts will be Wilhelm Bachaus, one of the transcendently great pianists of the century. In the United States for a too brief season in 1911, the period of his stay was inadequate for the appearances this great pianist was requested to make. A conqueror wherever he was heard, his admirers desired to know more of him. The season of 1913-14 will be brightened by the appearance of this modest tho brilliant and intellectual artist, who enjoys individual notions of his art and its importance, and whose poetic intellectuality guides and clarifies his interpretations.

De Pachmann's Phenomenal Success in London

Vladimir de Pachmann has electrified all London this June. Critics and audiences are enthusiastic about him, and the English papers teemed with his praises, doing homage to his genius. It is even hinted that there may be a de Pachmann farewell of the world, to occupy the next few years, including our own United States, though the little exponent of Chopin detests the mal de mer of an ocean crossing. However, that's for the future.

At a luncheon party yesterday, in a delightful Fifth Avenue residence, where the hostess is known for her brilliant wit, as well as her art in satisfying the most exacting gourmet, de Pachmann came in for his share of praise. The Editor of the New York section of Music News at this luncheon sat next to an American woman just returned from a year abroad, who assured this writer that she had attended a de Pachman recital at Queen's Hall in London in June, boasting an audience of representative musicians, which had come to do honor to the great little man, and that she had never heard him play with more fire and zest.

Also the Editor of the New York section of Music News is in receipt of a communication from Francois Pallottelli, touring manager and friend of de Pachmann, enclosing some wonderful de Pachmann London programs; a Chopin program of the choicest morsels, proving a stimulating, if somewhat barmecidal feast as follows:

Sonata, Op. 35, B flat minor.....Chopin
Grave Doppio movimento
Scherzo, E flat minor
Marche Funebre, B flat minor
Finale, B flat minor
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 10, C sharp minor
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 11, B major
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 19, E flat major
Prelude, Op. 28, No. 16, B flat minor
Impromptu, Op. 36, F sharp major
Ballade, Op. 47, A flat major
Nocturne, Op. 27, No. 2, D flat major
Etude, Op. 25, No. 3, F major
Etude, Op. 25, No. 4, A minor
Mazurka, Op. 59, No. 3, F sharp minor
Third Scherzo, Op. 39, C. sharp minor
..... Chopin

Mr. Pallottelli's letter is in part as follows: "Many thanks for your charming letter and your little write-up in Music News. Enclosed I send you some of the many London press cuttings and the programs of the last two concerts, which were the greatest triumphs the Master ever had. Of my own impression I can say as did many others, that they had never heard the dear old man play better.

"The dear Master (de Pachmann) sends you many kind remembrances and hopes that he shall have the pleasure of seeing you over here some time in the near future."

The Charming Germaine Schnitzer

From Australia, where the two young people, Germaine Schnitzer and her husband are honey-mooning, the distinguished pianist who enjoyed so succesful a season in these United States, sends greetings to Music News in general, and the Editor of the New York section in particular, enclosing an engraved announcement of her wedding.

In her letter to this writer she gives the assurance of radiant happiness and the promise of a return to America before the close of the autumn.

Miss Trapper to Lecture

Miss Emma Trapper, formerly of the Musical Courier, a well known writer and journalist, is unusually talented as a diseuse and a lecturer. Her dates are filling fast, and from all parts of the country come requests for circulars and literature. A great season is expected for this talented and charming woman, whose many-sidedness includes the modesty and repose of a beautiful womanhood; the gifts of veracity, straightforwardness and sincerity.

ORGANISTS' CONVENTION

The Program

The program for the convention of the National Association of Organists at Ocean Grove, August 4th to 9th, inclusive, while not yet entirely complete, is in a sufficiently advanced state to make a perusal of it very interesting reading. The convention will be called to order at 1:30 on Monday afternoon, August 4, to hear the address of the president, Dr. J. Christopher Marks. On the four succeeding days there will be both morning and afternoon sessions, besides an engagement for every evening. The session on Saturday morning will end the real business of the convention, the afternoon of that day being devoted to the mysteries of the Convention Rumpus Club, gently led by Raphael Navarro. The sixth annual convention will go out in a blaze of glory in the performance of "The Messiah" in the Auditorium on Saturday evening.

The Organ Recitals

Seven recitals have already been arranged for the convention week, and of these only one will be given in the Ocean Grove Auditorium. This will in all probability be given by Mr. Percy Stearnes, late organist of the Cathedral at Albany, N. Y., and now organist of the Atlanta Auditorium. The other six recitals will be given on the fine Austin organ in the First Methodist Church in Asbury Park. The list of organists for those recitals is a very formidable one, being as follows:

Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of St. Thomas' Church, New York, and late of York Minster, England.

Mr. Newton J. Corey, organist of Fort Street Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich.

Mr. J. J. Miller, organist of Christ Church, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. Clifford Demarest, organist of the Church of the Messiah, New York.

Mr. William H. Gage, organist of the Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J.

Mr. Arthur H. Turner, organist of Trinity Church, Springfield, Mass.

Other organists whom it is hoped will play are: Dr. Francis Hemington, organist of the Church of the Epiphany, Chicago; Mr. Carl Rupprecht of Chicago; Mrs. E. B. Summers of Keokuk, Iowa, and Mr. George Herbert Fairclough of St. Paul, Minn.

The Convention Papers

The subjects of the papers to be read at the convention cover a very large field in their diversity and comprehensiveness. At no former convention has such a wealth of subjects been offered, while the names of those presenting the papers furnish the best indication as to their excellence. They are as follows:

Dr. William A. Wolf of Lancaster, Pa., "Music of the Moravian Church."

Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, F. R. C. O., New York City, N. Y., "The Essential Elements of Churchly Music."

Mr. William D. Armstrong, Alton, Ill.,

OCEAN GROVE CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

"Hymns—Their Use and Abuse."

Mr. Reginald Lee McAll, New York, N. Y., "Church Music of the Congregational Type."

Mr. Chester H. Beebe, treasurer of the News," Chicago, "Musical Journalism."

Mr. James W. Hill, Haverhill, Mass., "The Problem of the Organist in the Smaller Cities."

Mr. Robert M. Treadwell, Arlington, N. J., "My Brother Organist."

Miss Henrietta Osborne Crane, Baltimore, Md., "Vestments."

Mr. Walter N. Waters, secretary of the National Association, "Motu Proprio."

Mr. Homer N. Bartlett, New York, N. Y., "Orchestration for the Organist."

Mrs. E. B. Summers, Keokuk, Iowa, "The Organ Recital as a Civic Asset."

Mr. James Pearce, Mus. Bac., Yonkers, N. Y., "Three Defects."

Mrs. Chester H. Beebe, treasurer of the National Association, "The Perfunctory Musician."

Mr. Newton J. Corey, Detroit, Mich., "The 'Oblong' Nuisance."

Mr. Tali Esen Morgan, superintendent of the National Association, "Standardization of the Organist."

Mr. Arthur Scott Brook, New York, N. Y., "How Can the Scope of the National Association Be Widened?"

Mr. Raphael Navarro, Caldwell, N. J., chairman of the Rumpus Club.

The Organ Builders' Exhibit

This exhibit will form one of the most interesting features of the convention. No less than five consoles will be shown, their makers being as follows:

The Austin Organ Company, Hartford, Conn.

The Hutchings Organ Company, Boston, Mass.

The Ernest N. Skinner Organ Company, Boston, Mass.

The Moller Organ Company, Hagerstown, Mr.

The Steere Organ Company, Springfield, Mass.

Other organ exhibits include a splendid working model, made by Hook-Hastings Company, Kendall Green, Mass., of the Polyphone Pipe. First class samples of every kind of flue pipe from the factory of Mr. Edwin B. Hedges, Westerfield, Mass., and every kind of reed pipe from the works of Mr. Fred I. White, Reading, Mass. There will also be chests, action parts and specialties in new pipes from the factories of Philipp Wirsching. Salem, Ohio; Murray Harris Company, Los Angeles, Cal., and other builders.

Owing to the kind offer of the Kinetic Engineering Company of Philadelphia, to send one of their electric blowers, all the exhibits will be shown under wind. The Organ Power Company of Hartford, Conn., will also exhibit one of their blowers.

A GROUP OF ORGANISTS AT THE N. A. O. IN OCEAN GROVE

The Gem Piano Pedal Attachment Company of Syracuse, N. Y., will show one of their instruments at the convention.

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

BY
SIDNEY SILBER

(Director Pianoforte Department, the University School of Music, Lincoln, Nebraska)

Sameness (monotony) is antagonistic to all high pianoforte expression.

A law ought to be enacted and enforced making it a punishable crime to bore people with bad piano playing—it is making music under false pretenses.

No one was ever killed on hearing a large, round singing tone come from a piano.

There are just two causes for mistakes in piano playing—inattention and ignorance.

If you "play better at home," evidently you leave your better self there, when playing for others. Never leave anything at home when playing the piano—strike home.

To express any state of mind or feeling you must either have experienced it yourself or you must be able to imagine it before you can do so.

Self-examination and self-criticism are the most reliable aids in the upbuilding of authoritative piano playing.

The joy of communicating is the very cornerstone of interpretative art

Don't try to learn too much in too short a time—you may have to suffer from mental malnutrition.

Many so-called artists are only artisans.

The idealists are the only realists.

Technic is wealth. Wealth should not be ruthlessly or aimlessly squandered.

If you are lacking in self-confidence before playing for others, your listeners will only feel for you instead of with you—the only legitimate kind of sympathy in music.

Many pupils are able only to imitate the "motions" of their teachers—not their "e-motions"—a case of "love's labor lost."

An artist is one who is truly wedded to his art and his muse—holy matrimony—none of your conventional marriages.

Do not play for others as you would not have them play for you.

Inspiration from within is more substantial and lasting than inspiration from without.

Modern pianists must be mental and emotional athletes—not acrobats. Moral: "Train, and remain in training."

Churches

NEW FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

A heavy rainfall put a quietus on the attendance at the third concert of the series being given at the New First Congregational Church, and there was in evidence not only a small audience, but also a very small part of the usual choir.

Nevertheless, the program had been so well selected and the soloists were so positively alert that there was still much of joy in the program and especially so in the work of John Doane, Jr., who, at the organ, showed again that wonderful equipment and that unfailing charm which had already made him very popular in the church.

Throughout the program he added dignity, variety and piquancy as they were needed. He filled out vacant spots in the ensemble, kept rhythms up to needed certainty and glossed over the whole performance with a sheen of color and sparkle. Mr. Doane is a wonderful accompanist as well as a remarkable soloist.

It is hardly fair to write in detail of the chorus work of the evening, for it could not by any chance be called representative of the usual work heard under the H. Augustine Smith baton, and yet there was much that was enjoyable.

The "New Girl Choir" did some neat work in three "Mother Goose Songs" by Gaynor, one of which, the "Little Miss Muffet," is curiously like the "Barcarolle" from "Chimes of Normandy."

"Eldorado" (Pinsuti) and the very unusual and piquant "Soldier's Life" by Sullivan were made enjoyable by the boy choir and male chorus, and in Elgar's "Land of Hope and Glory" (Pomp and Circumstance) all that was lacking was volume.

In this number Mr. Frank M. Dunford was the soloist and displayed great power and equal control in the rather flamboyant lines, while in Busch's remarkable setting of "The Ride of Paul Revere," he displayed artistry of the most pronounced type.

The solo line in this work is extended and varied, and its correct manipulation entails the fact of fine voice, as well as musicianship. Mr. Dunford provided these assets in full measure and added thereto an enunciation which was a separate joy and delight, in this respect excelling the chorus, for as matter of fact, no words whatever could be distinguished as they came from the ensemble.

Master Homer Watson quite distinguished himself in some wise little "readings," and Miss Lucy Hartman, contralto, proved herself an excellent singer and also an interpreter of songs with but few equals.

Her voice sounded beautiful and was managed with great artistry, but it was in the fact that she was able to infuse her songs with vital meaning that the audience found greatest delight.

Seldom, indeed, is a Scotch ballad sung better than was the Foote arrangement of "Loch Lomond" by Miss Hartman, and "Illinois" (in keeping with the spirit of the evening) was done with a clarity and power not heard before. A modern song, title not heard, was sung well from every vocal standpoint, and the encore (a "darkey" humoreske) was a perfect gem. Miss Hartman prefaced her work with illuminative remarks and altogether won a very secure place in the affections of the New First audience. C. E. W.

"HOLY CITY" AT LA GRANGE

Mr. Phelps Cowan presented Gaul's "Holy City" at Emanuel Church in La Grange on Monday evening and in spite of unpropitious weather pleased a fair-sized audience very much.

The first cause for this successful presentation lay in Mr. Cowan himself, for few organists are more effective either in the matter of purely instrumental moments or in accompanying, an art which he has reduced to a scientifically correct and thoroughly correct basis.

The organ at this church is not a large one, but under such expert manipulation as that of Mr. Cowan it was made to yield up most satisfactory orchestral background for the effective vocal work of "Holy City."

Mr. Cowan employed no chorus at this performance, but instead all the ensemble was presented by six voices, which also took care of the solo numbers in exceptional way.

These singers were Mrs. Orpha Kendall Holstman, Miss Alice Ione Cramer, Mrs. Zoe Pearl Park, Mrs. Robinson, Mr. Grant Kimbell and Mr. Frank Dunford.

The ensembles were managed in very expert and thoroughly effective way and the more characteristic solos were sung with much beauty.

Mrs. Holstman was effective in her larger solo, "These Are They," and Mrs. Park displayed the same rich quality in "Eye Hath Not Seen," which has so often distinguished her work.

Mr. Kimbell sang "My Soul Is Athirst" with an authority and a vocal excellence which once more marked him as a singer with a most promising future. His work throughout the season has been increasingly effective. Mr. Dunford, broad of style and powerful of voice, accomplished all his work with much of sincerity and in the long scene beginning with "Thus Saith the Lord," he disclosed many vocal and interpretative virtues.

Miss Cramer assisted throughout with much display of musicianship and in the trio, "It Shall Come to Pass," was particularly interesting.

Barron.—Robert L. Barron, violinist, played at a musicale at Grace M. E. church last Thursday evening, his numbers being "Meditation" from "Thais," (Massenet); "Folies de Espagne" (Corelli); "The Rosary" (Nevin); "An Old Love Tale" (Bergen); and "Humoresque" by Borowski.

Fram.—Arthur Fram of the Sherwood Music School is spending a month at the Thousand Islands.

ALBERT SPALDING

Albert Spalding, the American violinist, arrived in New York last week after eight months tour of Europe. The artist announces that he will go to South America next summer (1914) and fill a long list of engagements. For the remainder of this summer Mr. Spalding will play at concerts and musicales at several fashionable resorts.

He returns to Europe on August 25, on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Zweite, and is again booked for a long tour abroad, beginning in Christiania early in September. Last autumn, winter and also in the spring of this year, Albert Spalding visited ten countries—Russia, Finland, Norway Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Holland, France, Italy and Belgium.

H. W. OWENS

Mr. H. W. Owens, the director of the Haydn Choral Society, is receiving congratulations on all sides because of his success at the Pittsburgh International Eisteddfod last week.

The Haydn Choral Society is only two years old, and in the contest it had but 124 singers, while the allowance was 150, a number realized to the last man by both Scranton and Cleveland, both of which are societies of many years' standing. In spite of this fact, however, Mr. Owens' society was awarded the second prize, and their exchequer is now richer by one thousand dollars than before they went to Pittsburgh.

The Haydn Choral Society, which has been heard in Chicago several times and which has been commended in no uncertain terms in Music News, recently gave a concert at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, at which time the prize numbers for Pittsburgh (two of the best choral numbers from "King Olaf") were so well sung as to make it seem certain that the society would be successful in the international contest. The Haydn Choral Society averages about one hundred singers and is made up of the choir of the Park Avenue M. E. Church and the Welsh Presbyterian Church in Chicago, augmented by the private pupils of Mr. Owens in Chicago, Plymouth and other cities.

ALBIN STEINDEL

Mr. Albin Steindel, violinist, was the soloist with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the concert of Wednesday, July 9, in Ravinia Park.

Mr. Steindel played the last two movements of the Wieniawski "Concerto in D Minor," and as a well deserved encore he played the "Dance of the Sylphs," by Maurice Goldblatt.

The men of the orchestra joined in the enthusiastic applause which was accorded him after his numbers.

The second movement ("Romance") was played with a beautiful singing tone, also displaying temperamental qualities of a high order. The last movement was played with excellent style, a truly remarkable technic, a good staccato and an excellent spiccato.

Goldblatt's charming "Dance of the Sylphs" was played with a great deal of daintiness and good rhythm, the harmonics being of crystalline pureness.

Mr. Steindel has been engaged to play again next Wednesday. He will play the Bruch "Concerto in D Minor." This will be his third appearance with the orchestra this summer. His first appearance was in Willow Grove Park, Philadelphia, Pa., where on June 18 he played the Bruch "Concerto in D Minor" with great success.

EDNA COOKINGHAM

Miss Cookingham last spring and summer spent seven months in Europe studying with Lhevinne in Berlin, but returned in the fall in time to take up her teaching at the American Conservatory.

Miss Cookingham has also a very large and very enthusiastic class in Irving Park, and this class gives each year one or two "closing concerts" in the spring or early summer. This season Miss Cookingham decided on one concert only, and this necessitated a very long program. It was, however, of very great interest and held the undivided attention of the large audience

New England CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

Year opens Sept. 18, 1913

BOSTON, MASS.

GEORGE W. CHADWICK, Director

THE LARGEST AND BEST EQUIPPED SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Located in the Music Center of America. It affords pupils the environment and atmosphere so necessary to a musical education. Its complete organization, its imposing Conservatory Building, splendid equipment, and the Residence Building offer exceptional facilities for students.

Complete Curriculum. Courses in every branch of Music, applied and theoretical, including Opera.

Owing to the practical training of students in our Normal Department, graduates are much in demand as teachers.

The free privileges of lectures, concerts and recitals, the opportunities of ensemble practice and appearing before audiences, and the daily associations are invaluable advantages to the music student.

A Complete Orchestra offers advanced pupils in voice, piano, organ and violin experience in rehearsals and public appearances with orchestral accompaniment.

Dramatic Department. Practical training in acting.

MILDRED POTTER BOOKED WITH CHICAGO APOLLO CLUB

The old adage that "nothing succeeds like success" was never more thoroughly substantiated than by Miss Mildred Potter, contralto, who by her wonderful voice, thorough musicianship and pleasing personality confirms the opinion expressed last season by Mr. Finck in the New York Evening Post "that Miss Potter can be hailed as the leading oratorio contralto for next season."

Her real worth as an oratorio artist may be measured by the fact that her manager, Walter Anderson, has already booked her with several of the big organizations for next year, including the New York Oratorio Society in "Ruth;" Toronto Mendelssohn Choir for two appearances (works not yet announced); Boston Cecilia Society in "St. Matthew," and the Chicago Apollo Club in the "Music Makers" and Dvorak's "Stabat Mater." Many festivals have practically been booked but are not ready to be announced.

GAYLORD YOST PLAYS AT CANTON, OHIO

Mr. Gaylord Yost, the violinist, played at Canton, Ohio, on July 1. His program included "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" (Saint-Saens), "Hebrew Song and Dance" (Zimbalist), "Pierrot-Serenade" (Randegger), "Muckentanz" (Henriques), "Humoresque" (Yost) and "Gypsy Dance" (Nachez). The Canton News of July 2 had the following to say of Mr. Yost's recital:

Gaylord Yost, the well known violinist of Indianapolis, was given a wonderful ovation when he appeared in concert Tuesday evening. Mr. Yost's playing, which had been heralded as artistic, delighted the large audience, composed largely of musical people. A master of the instrument and possessing an artistic soul and unusual interpretative ability, Mr. Yost was given enthusiastic bursts of applause following some of the brilliant passages of his numbers, the audience being unable to restrain itself until the end of his number. OOLIATA ZIMMERMANN

Ooliata Zimmermann left the last of June for a two months' rest in the spacious country home of her uncle, Hon. Hobart Krum, Schoharie, N. Y. Her going now was made because Alice Gill, her assistant and artist pupil, takes the work on through July, many desiring to work until August.

FREDERICK PRESTON SEARCH

Frederick Preston Search, the American 'cellist, has been spending the summer at his old home, Wyoming, Ohio, in his wonted fiery technical drill and in composition. No musician's procedure can better illustrate the tremendous activities by which a great artist keeps himself in perfect tune and at concert pitch. With him it is work, work, work, as the only condition by which the marvelous efficiency of today is lost in the greater perfection of tomorrow. His mornings are given almost entire to the most terrific practice; his afternoons to composition; the evenings to what he calls his "let-go playing." His summer workplace is at his cottage home in one of the suburbs of Cincinnati. Two or three acres of delightful grounds, hemmed in by great trees and shrubbery, surround the place. In the evenings special friends are wont to gather and esconce themselves in the numerous surrounding hammocks. Then it is that the young 'cellist loves to play, providing the spell is on him. The glass has been removed from the screen-covered windows, and the glorious music rolls out, hour after hour, as enchantingly as from a Venetian float.

To other people the summer has seemed hot, but Frederick Preston Search has not thought of that. The between-seasons times are when an artist does his serious study. During the hot weeks of this summer Frederick Preston Search, in composition, has rolled out over 200 pages of the completed orchestral score of his "Symphony in D Major," besides numerous 'cello concert pieces, songs, etc. He is an untiring worker, and musical composition flows from his facile pen as readily as that of the masters in America is drawn by his bow. A great composer has arrived in America, as well as a wonderful soloist, and also a most remarkable conductor whenever he cares to permit the baton to share with the bow in the honors of the future. Frederick Preston Search is twenty-three years old. He has done a marvelous work for one so young.

EFFA ELLIS

The following is an appreciation of Miss Effa Ellis, printed recently in the Pacific Coast Musician:

Advancement in teaching methods within the past few years has been quite as wonderful—quite as productive of astonishing results as has the development in other lines of science. This is particularly true of the training of the young mind, and probably in no other branch of pedagogical work with children is this more true than in music.

Los Angeles is at present entertaining a woman whose reputation as a lecturer and teacher of music teachers of children, is nation-wide; this is Effa Ellis of the Effa Ellis Music School, Omaha, Neb., and the author of the "Effa Ellis Teaching System and Keyboard Harmony."

Miss Ellis believes in keeping the charm and beauty of music foremost in the child mind, and to do away with the idea of drudgery; she believes in interesting the child so that he will be eager to bring out these beauties. We are interested in what we read; we find no enjoyment in analyzing the letters that compose the words and the words that compose the sentences—they are merely the mechanical means that convey the thought; we forget them. Miss Ellis believes in holding up the "reading idea;" that is, to have the young pupil see the musical idea that is represented by the "letters" and "words"—the mechanical means of its expression—and unconsciously, as it were, learn the latter through the delightful incentive of the former.

Here is a logical as well as a psychological way of upbuilding the child mind. The child is interested in what he already knows about the simpler things of the child world. Miss Ellis takes these familiar, interest-catching things and builds with them, until little by little, withal with relative swiftness, she has erected a substantial foundation, or even a consequential superstructure of musical knowledge within the child mind—all this without the tiresome routine study usually considered essential to a like accomplishment.

Miss Ellis' demonstrative work in private and in schools, also her own teaching, has attracted much attention since her arrival in this city a few weeks ago, and her apartments at the Auditorium Hotel are the mecca for many an interested teacher and pupil bent on acquiring progressive pedagogical ideas. Her method of harmony teaching—associating ideas of a story in harmony building—is as interesting as it is original. It catches the youthful mind—yes and the older mind too—and the wonderful results of the application of Miss Ellis' teaching ideas is attested to by music teachers and critics the length and breadth of the country.

Miss Ellis, since her arrival in California, has addressed a number of educational gatherings, including the M. T. A., has demonstrated her system of keyboard in public and privately, and is making many warm converts to her method of work. In addition to her headquarters at the Auditorium Hotel, she is establishing her work in San Francisco and San Diego. She is a woman of intellectuality as well as originality—enthusiastic, progressive, thoroughly believing in herself. It is such people as Miss Ellis that make the world move, be it in art, business or science. (Advertisement.)

CAMPANINI

Cleofonte Campanini has agreed to conduct the performances of "Madame Butterfly" in English, which will be one of the Saturday night series in the vernacular, advanced by the Chicago Opera Company during the coming season.

Among the operas to be given in English on Saturday nights during the coming season will be "Martha," "Gioconda," "Faust," "Cinderella," "Madame Butterfly," "Tales of Hofmann," "Cricket on the Hearth," and a triple bill embracing "The Lovers' Quarrel," "The Secret of Susanne" and "Cavalleria Rusticana." Among the leading artists for these performances will be Carolina White, Glenn Hall, Maggie Teyte, Amadeo Bassi, Aliee Zeppilli and Ruby Heyl.

BRAZELTON TO LEAVE APPLETON

The following is taken from the Appleton (Wis.) Daily Post:

Edgar A. Brazelton, director of the school of pianoforte and theory of music at the Lawrence Conservatory of Music has presented his resignation to the trustees of Lawrence College. Mr. Brazelton, who has been connected with the conservatory for the past four years will establish a private school in Milwaukee and teach regular courses in piano and theory and will also offer special courses for teachers of piano.

Mr. Brazelton has been closely identified with the growth and progress of the Lawrence Conservatory of Music, his work in the piano department having contributed materially to the enviable reputation that the local institution enjoys in the field of music, throughout this section of the country. It was Mr. Brazelton who organized the Appleton Choral Society and for the past four years has given two concerts each year, during which period the singers have presented eight or ten splendidly prepared standard cantatas and oratorios. In fact the musical festivals in which the Appleton Choral Club participated drew interested persons from as far north as Marinette, and south as far as Fort Atkinson, evidencing the widespread reputation that the local organization had earned for itself. Mr. Brazelton says his object in resigning is to take advantage of some very flattering patronage that has been offered him providing he would consent to open a private school in Milwaukee and he feels that the opening suggested to him is so much better than he can do here that he should accept it at once. The departure of Mr. Brazelton from Appleton will be sincerely regretted by all those with whom he has been in contact, but his many friends will unite in wishing him unlimited success in his new field.

CECIL FANNING

Following are a few comments taken from the very remarkable press notices given the work of Mr. Fanning in London:

Daily Telegraph, London, England, April 9, 1913: Of recent years it has become something of a habit to regard singers very much from the interpretative side of their art, and rather to discount beauty of voice. It is not difficult really to see the reason for this. Interpretative skill, as part of modern technic, is now generally looked for, and too generally accepted as the "real art;" whereas in reality the moment the skill—an acquired virtue—is observable it has little to do with spontaneous art. Yesterday afternoon Mr. Cecil Fanning gave a vocal recital in Bechstein Hall, during which he showed both sides of the matter. At first when he sang arias from operas by Monteverde and Gretry, fine arias finely sung, his interpretative art was almost mechanical; but as he warmed to his work it melted into the spontaneous, or the apparently spontaneous, and for ourselves we do not ask to hear a lovelier interpretation than that of "Lass O Welt," given as an encore, or of Wolf's "Zur Ruh'," or of "Der Wanderer." "Wohin?" was delightful in its flexibility and fresh naturalness, and Eugen Haile's "Teufelslied" capital in its cynical humor. Mr. Fanning however, is not merely an interpretative singer of the "acquired" or even the spontaneous type; he is more, namely, the happy owner of a very beautiful and even baritone voice, great purity of diction, and a perfectly clear enunciation and sense of style; while, as with so many of his American compatriots, his pronunciation of foreign tongues seems to show that he has a real speaking knowledge of the languages, and not merely a coldly nodding acquaintance with them. He was very earnestly accompanied by Mr. H. B. Turpin, and his singing was clearly appreciated.

Daily Telegraph, London, England, April 16, 1913: Mr. Cecil Fanning, who created so excellent an impression by the quality of his singing, the beauty of his diction, and the sense of distinction in his style at his first recital a week ago, more than confirmed it at his second given yesterday afternoon in Bechstein Hall, for now his command over his voice was far better than before, and his art more sincere and less obvious. His interpretation of Loewe's ballad,

"Sir Oluf," was finely dramatic, and his singing of "Der Heilige Joseph," and "Der Musikant," both by Hugo Wolf, was in a high degree praiseworthy. More should certainly be heard of so accomplished and so gifted a singer.

Daily Graphic, London, England, April 9, 1913: Mr. Cecil Fanning gave the first of two vocal recitals at the Bechstein Hall yesterday afternoon. It is not often that one is fortunate enough to listen to a voice so entirely sympathetic in every respect. In no part of his register is there a trace of hardness or wrong production, and a baritone of this quality is as rare as it is welcome. Such songs as Eugen Haile's "Teufelslied," and "The Smuggler's Song," a setting by Marshall Kernochan of a characteristic Kipling poem, demanded a considerable amount of dramatic emphasis, and many singers who are able to furnish this sacrifice at the same time the purity of their tone. Mr. Fanning, however, never once fell into this error, although, quite apart from its musical value, his rendering of the former song was a brilliant effort. Other less disturbing songs in the program, the choice of which in itself deserves congratulation for its originality, were Hugo Wolf's "Zur Ruh'," "The Lute Player's House" (Winthrop Rogers) and "The Last Leaf" (Sidney Homer).

WILLIAM AP MADOC

The Pittsburgh Post at the close of the recent Eisteddfod in that city contained the following:

The happiest Welshman in America today, and one who is always creating enough merriment to cause others happiness, is Professor William ApMadoc of Chicago, one of the conductors of the Eisteddfod. He has a ready store of Welsh repartee, and those who do not know what that is are finding out quickly. When he is active on the stage there is always a war of Welsh words.

Opening night Ap Madoc was announcing the choirs. From about a quarter of a mile away came a shout in Welsh demanding the name of one about to sing. Ap Madoc had just announced the name. "It's the choir from Carnegie, Pennsylvania, United States of America, Western Hemisphere, Byd Hwn!" he shouted. There was a roar of laughter. "Byd Hwn" means "this world."

CARL E. CRAVEN

Mr. Carl E. Craven has been appointed studio assistant to Mr. William Clare Hall and will begin his duties in August at 428 Fine Arts Building.

Mr. Craven recently sang with great success at a garden fete at the residence of Mrs. F. N. Matthews, and of his appearance in "Elijah" at Alma, Mich., the Alma "Record" said: "The work of Carl E. Craven was especially commendable. He has an excellent voice and his dramatic interpretation is splendid." (Advertisement.)

KATHERINE HILLEBRAND

In a private musicale recently the young soprano, Miss Katherine Hillebrand was heard to exceptional advantage in "Vilanelle" by Del Aqua, and the famous aria, "Vissi d' Arte" from Puccini's "La Tosca."

Miss Hillebrand has a good stage presence and a very pleasing manner, and as these graces are combined with perfect repose and an evidently extensive concert experience, it follows that her work before the public is filled with authority and is consequently very effective.

Her voice is a coloratura soprano, reaching easily to E in Alt and the purely technical aspects of her art have been studied so carefully and developed in such abundance that she is able to sing with entire ease all the fiature with which such songs as that by Del Aqua is filled, and at the same time she has all the passion and the depth of feeling required for the splendid vocal study of Puccini.

Her voice is crystal clear—she is absolutely impeccable as to pitch and her breath control is such that she manipulates the shading with remarkable effectiveness.

Her command of languages is a fine one and the two songs were given in their original texts with much care and corresponding effect. With such a fine voice and such evidently good method as that possessed by Miss Hillebrand, and with her stage experience already so advanced there should be no question whatever about her permanent and great success.

CLARENCE EIDAM

Some comment on the work of Mr. Eidam before the Indiana State Music Teachers' Association at Marion, Ind.:

One of the really big men of the program was the pianist Eidam. His work on the piano was a marvel to every one and it is a safe assertion that his superior has never been heard in this city. Mr. Eidam is a success as a pianist for the simple reason that his ability is natural, not acquired. He proved this time and again, and throughout the evening he appeared at perfect ease. The Rhapsodie (Dohnanyi) was beautiful, but did not serve to show the artist to the best advantage, so that it remained for him to execute the Octave Etude (Sauer), which showed him to be the artist he really is. For his second group Mr. Eidam played a Valse, Nocturne, and the Polonaise (A flat), by Chopin.

Mr. Eidam displayed rare execution and technique and played with the temperament of the true artist.—The Marion Daily Chronicle.

Clarece Eidam in two groups of solos displayed a brilliant technique, and a style of playing which aroused the enthusiasm of his hearers. His numbers were given in a most musicianly manner.—Marion Leader Tribune. (Advertisement.)

GEORGIA KOBER

The Buffalo Courier comments as follows:

A splendid program was presented at the benefit concert at Elmwood Music Hall last evening for the benefit of the ambulance fund of the German Deaconess Hospital.

Miss Georgia Kober, the distinguished pianist, of Chicago, played three groups of numbers of classic and modern composers. Miss Kober is an artist of brilliant equipment and technical facilities, as well as being a tone colorist, all her interpretations being marked by delicacy and poetic feeling and sufficient dramatic intensity to enable her to deliver the message of each composition.

The "Prelude in E Minor" by Mendelssohn was delightfully played, and she gave an interesting and unusual interpretation of the Chopin Waltz, Op. 64. The "Scherzo in B Minor" by Chopin was a most brilliant offering. In a second group, "Preludium" by MacDowell, "Exhilaration" by Sherwood, and three charming numbers by American women, "Nocturne" by Downing, and "Lyric Studies," Nos. 2 and 9, by Freer, were notable for genuine musical achievement and won much applause. "En Bateau" by Debussy was a colorful mosaic, and the "Melodie" by Rachmaninow was superb for its dramatic feeling. Madame Kober was repeatedly recalled for an encore. (Advertisement.)

AN INTERVIEW WITH STEPHALI

The following is from the Worcester Daily Telegram:

Sofia Stephali believes that woman should have a choice in making the laws if she has any property. She quotes "Taxation without representation is tyranny." Further than that, she does not yet go, in her opinion as to votes for women. She said, yesterday, at Hotel Warren, where she is registered for her concert lectures in Association Hall, that she is a suffragist, and then explained to what extent.

Stephali is not her real name but an Italian stage name. She said: "I have been before the public since I was two and a half years old. I chose this form of concert work because it is helpful to the public, I believe. I do not sing for money or fame. I look at this in an entirely different way. I wish to help.

"There is so much in music that can be enjoyed if one understands. So much goes over the heads of an audience. So many sing to the cultivated few instead of to the ordinary concert-goer. I wish to reach the average or the untutored lover of music as well as those who understand it thoroughly. I

A LETTER FROM WALTER DELLERS

Music News is in receipt of the following interesting letter from Walter Dellers, who is spending the summer in Europe:

Even on vacation wanderings true musicians are brought together by the patron saint, Cecilia. Our steamer, the good ship "Noordam" of the Holland-America line, had left the Ambrose Channel light ship but a few hours behind, and I had already discovered a number of Cecilia's disciples on board. The first was Professor M. Leefson, the well-known pianist-pedagogue of Philadelphia, going to Holland for his annual vacation on the continent. Several hours more and we found Miss Margaret Cameron, of the piano department of Northwestern University School of Music, Evanston, and soon afterward Mr. Jacob Bloom, violinist and director of the Southern Conservatory, Memphis, Tenn. Each day added a new follower of our patron saint and in less than a week the Noordam passengers were invited to a midocean concert, the program of which follows:

We landed at Rotterdam June 27, parted, each going our several ways, we going on to The Hague, capital of the well-beloved Wilhelmina's little kingdom, and called the largest and prettiest "village" of the continent. And so it is in spite of its two hundred and sixty thousand population.

Scheveningen, the North Sea bathing resort, interested us more than the Hague,

AAGE FREDERICKS

Some recent press comment is as follows:

Bonham, Texas, Press.—The violin recital last Friday by Mr. Fredericks, the Danish violinist, drew a most appreciative audience. Mr. Fredericks is an artist of elegant and distinguished manners, and held his audience from the beginning.

His whole life is centered in his art and he has conquered the technic of the violin as his difficult selections plainly show. The first number, "Le Trille du Diable" by Tartini, was a work of much interest. The slow movement showed strength and directness.

"Concertstuck" by Saint-Saens was charming in its brilliancy and quite captivating to the appreciative listeners. "The Reverie" by Renard dedicated to Mr. Fredericks, deserves special comment. It is not often we have the pleasure of discussing new compositions and it is therefore uncommonly pleasurable to dwell upon "The Reveric." Mr. Renard has been known to the public a number of years as a sterling musician, and an exceptionally gifted composer. This composition is a serious, well wrought work, and while there is a grave significance in it, yet the tenderest, purest sentiments find expression in this splendid tone investiture. Thematically, it is good and wholesome and its treatment throughout is obviously the work of the composer skilled in the art of developing his ideas.

MacDowell-Kuester's "Midsummer" and Gossec's "Govotte" were delightful numbers, like the rest brought repeated encores from the audience. The last piece, "Airs Russe" by Wieniawski, was beautiful in the extreme. The themes and expositions were clear and attractive and their development while difficult and complex was pleasingly comprehensible.

Saint John's Church News, New Rochelle, N. Y.—Mr. Fredericks is a brilliant young Danish violinist and plays in such masterly fashion as to challenge comparison with the best artists.

New Haven Press.—Mr. Aage Fredericks appeared with great success at the New Haven May Festival, playing the Corelli "La Folia" and Vieuxtemps' "Ballade et Polonaise."

FREDERICKS PROVES GREAT VIOLINIST

Has Tone, Technic and Delights Audience—Large Crowd Braves Weather for Concert

Despite the nasty weather a large audience heard the concert Tuesday night in James Millikin University Auditorium. Those who braved the weather were amply repaid. The program was one of the best of the kind ever heard here.

Mr. Fredericks bowing is superb. He has strength and power and delicacy, and there seemed to be no limit to the volume, brilliance and surety of his tone. He is indeed a great violinist.

Second Group Makes Hit

Although his entire program was a delight, Mr. Fredericks' second group of shorter compositions made the special hit for him. It was calculated to be more popular in its appeal and to woo the hearers with lovely harmonics and haunting melodies.

Of the three presented the first was the most pleasing, it was a familiar Chopin "Nocturne," arranged for violin by Sarasate, and Mr. Fredericks played it delightfully. The other two were "Intermezzo" (Tolhurst-Fredericks), and "Gavotte" (Gossec-Elman), and each gave new delight.

Lengthy Concert Enjoyed

It was rather a daring thing to do to make a debut in Decatur with a lengthy and involved Beethoven "Concerto," for the stigma has long been on us that as a community we are not musical. In spite of the heaviness of this composition it seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed. It was certainly beautifully rendered.

Audience Enthusiastic

Each number was enthusiastically received. Even the Beethoven "Concerto," Opus 61, with which Mr. Fredericks began his interesting and varied program, pleased. This concerto is calculated to tax the ahility of the performer as well as the understanding of the auditors.

Master of the Violin

In this first number Mr. Fredericks demonstrated that he has technical proficiency of the highest virtuoso type, and a musical memory that is really stupendous, a "bull dog" memory, as another musician called it. When we are told that this young Danish musician can play without note most of the great concertos written for his instrument, admiration increases.—Decatur Press.

however. Here are immense hotels, one of the very finest beaches, and attractions which make Holland's Atlantic City a leading summer resort of the continent.

The concerts in the Kurhaussaal are of especial interest to musicians. These are given twice each day, either in the Kursaal itself, or in fine weather on the Terrasse. The Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin played these concerts until a few years ago, when the German emperor changed their summer work, and now the famous Lamoreux Orchestra of Paris is here. Lighter concerts are given in the afternoon under the direction of one of its assistant conductors, but in the evening there are symphony concerts comparable with the best of the regular winter season, and under the direction of the first conductor, M. Catherine. We were fortunate enought to hear the following fine program:

Overture "Tragic".....Brahms
Concerto for Violoncello.....Dvorak
M. Maurice Mareschal
INTERMISSION
Symphony in C major (No. 3).....Paul Dukas

Without doubt one of the finest orchestras, if not the finest I have ever heard, the Lamoreaux organization impressed me especially with the general beauty of tone, the exceptionally fine wood winds and brass, the purity of intonation of the strings, and the splendid ensemble. The interpretations of M. Catherine were distinctly sane, unsensational, yet always brilliant and highly interesting. Accompaniments such as were played for the violoncello concerto I have never before heard. There was a delicacy and yet a fullness that gave just the right sort of background for the proper display of the solo part. M. Maurice Mareschal, a young artist with the exuberance of youth, a fine virile tone, splendid technical equipment, and high ideals played the solo part as well as I have ever heard it.

TEACHERS' NORMAL INSTITUTE

Several hundred teachers of public school music, representing almost every state in the country, are attending the normal summer sessions at Northwestern university. Mr. Farr, manager, reports that this is proving to be but another successful western season, and that the management is even pressed to accommodate all students applying for entrance.

In addition to the regular class work, numerous recitals are being featured for the benefit of the students, with Friday evenings invariably reserved for attendance at the Chicago Symphony Orchestra concerts at Ravinia.

Snow.—Miss Mathilde Heuchling, contralto, and Mr. William Beard, baritone, who appeared at the University of Chicago concert of Monday evening, are both under the management of Mrs. Harriet Martin Snow.

White.—Dorothy Mayne, an eight-year-old pianist, pupil of Mrs. Lida White of Gary, made a successful initial appearance in a recent class program.

Fallon.—Miss Rose Fallon, contralto, sang at the Homewood Country Club on July 4, and before the Oriental Consistory on July 7.

HANNA BUTLER

Mrs. Butler will spend several weeks at the summer home of Mrs. Samuel Insul in New Hampshire, going first, however, to sing with orchestra in Minneapolis.

Mrs. Butler has been very busy during her normal term and her pupils have been singing in numerous places. Mrs. W. A. Alexander, one of the singers studying with Mrs. Butler, appeared at Ravinia Park yesterday and Miss Genevieve Barry recently appeared in Wheeling, W. Va., the "Register" of that city speaking of her work as follows:

Miss Barry has much in her favor besides a good vocal equipment, vivacity, and personal attractiveness. She has also an exceptionally pure coloratura soprano which she uses with excellent effect, and she showed her splendid sense of contrast, her voice being at one moment tender, and then filled with color and emotion. Her pianissimo tones being of indescribable sweetness and expressiveness and her style is noticeably refined.

Oft repeated applause was given her during the evening which testified the deep appreciation of her auditors.

American Conservatory—Miss Marie Kryl and Miss Ruth Ray will give a piano and violin program on Saturday morning at 10:45 at Kimball Hall.

Fellers.—Mr. Foss L. Fellers of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago gave a very successful piano recital at the Findlay (Ohio) College late in June, being assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Guy C. Latchaw, baritone and soprano.

———♯♯♯———

Edwards.—Marie Edwards left Chicago on Monday to remain in the west until October. She will play in Los Angeles, Pasadena, San Diego and other cities of the coast.

———♯♯♯———

Bryant.—Miss Nelle Bryant, dramatic soprano, who has been abroad studying and singing in opera for the last six years, is spending the summer in Chicago.

———♯♯♯———

Keller.—Mr. Walter Keller gave an inaugural organ recital on last Wednesday on the new organ in the Congregational Church of Plymouth, Wis.

———♯♯♯———

Wilmette.—Members of the Garfield Park M. E. Choir gave a music service at the Wilmette Congregational Church on last Sunday afternoon.

———♯♯♯———

Hunter.—Jane Ogden Hunter, Chicago composer, is visiting at Paw Paw Lake.

BOSTON, MASS.

Six concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence next season. It has been the custom for the past seven years to have five concerts in this city, and increasing patronage warrants another appearance of the orchestra there.

Business manager, W. H. Brennan, includes with his list of soloists, Fritz Kreisler, Paderewski, their only appearance in Providence being with the orchestra; Miss Florence Hinkle, Mme. Teresa Carreno, and Max Pauer.

Mac Dowell Association, Peterboro, N. H., Increases Its Real Estate Holdings

The Mac Dowell Association has purchased the Tenney farm, consisting of over a hundred acres, which adjoins the property purchased by Edward Mac Dowell, the composer, sometime previous to his death, in Peterboro, N. H. It is said that studios are to be erected where earnest students can go during vacation, and study music and art, amid the inspiring surroundings which proved so potent to Mac Dowell himself.

The writer noticed at his visit this summer that the ornamental fence formerly enclosing the composers' grave, has been replaced by a splendid double wall of dark grey field-stone granite. This, with the great boulder of like character and color, that serves as a monument, imbedded on which is the name, age, and other data of the eminent musician, in imperishable bronze, make a mausoleum worthy an American who loved his country and expressed his devotion in music that is filled with the aroma of woods, of meadow and hill, and of the grandeur of the silent Monadnock, the moveless sentinel, ever

Sunday, July 13, Theron D. Perkins and his concert band gave a program in honor of the G. A. R. veterans, recently in reunion at Gettysburg, on Boston Common.

The grand American fantasy, "Star Spangled Banner," Herbert, was the closing number.

Sunday, July 20, German Sunday, and the Wagner centennial, will be observed and German singing societies of the city will assist, singing their German folk songs.

The Swedish singing societies follow Juy 27, and organizations of other nationalities will be heard on the Sundays to follow.

It is proposed to have a French Sunday, Norwegian Sunday, etc.

Artists and works of the Worcester festival.

All of the artists for the fifty-sixth annual musical festival have not been engaged, but the soloists for Verdi's "Manzoni Requiem," which opens the festival Wednesday night, October 1, will be Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, contralto; Miss Florence Hinkle, soprano; Lambert Murphy, tenor; Herbert Witherspoon, bass.

Mme. Schumann-Heink was soloist at these concerts in 1900, and 1907. Miss Hinkle came in 1910 and 1911; Mr. Murphy sang here in 1911; Mr. Witherspoon appeared in 1902, 1903, 1905, and 1910.

Thursday night, October 2, Evan H. Williams, who has sung at the festivals of 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901, 1907, 1911, and is a welcome tenor in Worcester, will create the role of "St. Francis of Assisi," a new and novel work by Pierne, which will be given its festival premier this year, and Reinhold Werrenrath, baritone, who was heard at these concerts in 1907 and 1908, will sing the part of Friar Leon in the same work.

Miss Alice Eldridge, from Boston, will make her first appearance as piano soloist at the Worcester festival Friday afternoon, October 3.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Festival Chorus of 400 voices, conducted by Dr. Arthur Mees, will be in attendance.

Local Composers Heard

At the services in the Plymouth Church, Sunday, July 6, the choir sang music composed by local writers. The quartet, "Let All Creation Praise," from the pen of Nathan H. Allen, long-time organist and director at Piedmont Church, and a charter member of A. O. G., was given at the morning session, and a semi-chorus, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," by E. W. Cummins, a singer of prominence in local circles; a quartet, "Tarry with Me," by William C. Steere, a local composer whose song "Allah," has received much favorable criticism, and a semi-chorus, "Woe Unto Them," was written by W. Gray Harris, the organist of the church.

Miss Anna C. Cambridge, soprano; Mrs. James Warden, contralto; Harold E. Barr, tenor; Dr. A. J. Harpin, basso and director; W. Gray Harris, organist with a chorus of fifty voices, furnish the music at this church.

Changes in the seating capacity of Mechanics' Hall have been directed by the Mechanics' Association committee, which will make a broader aisle in the galleries, and thus an easier entrance and exit.

MISSOURI MUSIC TEACHERS' CONVENTION

(Delayed Report)

The eighteenth annual convention of the Missouri Music Teachers' Association was held at Joplin, Mo., June 17, 18, 19 and 20. It was attended by over a hundred delegates from all parts of the state, all of whom reported a very delightful and beneficial time. The business meetings, round table talks and nine concerts were held at the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Tuesday

The formal opening meeting was postponed from Tuesday afternoon to Wednesday on account of the late arrival of the president of the association, James T. Quarles, the well-known St. Louis organist.

At 2 o'clock the following program was given as the opening concert by artists of the district:

Bouree, B minor ..... Bach-Saint-Saens
Nocturne, E major ..... Chopin
En Route ..... Godard
Miss Hildred Curry, Webb City
At Love's Call ..... Leoni
The Gray Dove ..... Louis Saar
At Dawning ..... Cadman
Miss Ruth Stemmons, Carthage
Barcarolle ..... Rubinstein
Evening Song ..... Gidor Seiss
By the Brook ..... E. Shuett
Arabesque ..... Leschetizky
Miss Helen Scoville, Joplin
"In Gedanken" ..... Henry K. Hadley
"Call Me No More" ..... C. W. Cadman
Miss Ida Hunt, Carthage
Praeludium from Suite Op. 10 ..... MacDowell
Nocturne, B flat ..... Paderewski
Waltz, D major ..... Stojowsky
Humoresque ..... Tchaikowsky
Miss Ruth Johnson, Carterville

This program was excellently given. Hildred Currey of Webb City displayed clear reliable technic and a refined musical style in her numbers. Ruth Stemmons of Carthage is a lyric soprano of pleasing quality and has considerable range. She sang with intelligent attention to the details of vocalization and interpretation. Miss Johnson is a player of pronounced individuality. Her first number, a MacDowell prelude, was given with much breadth and power, while everything she did was marked by excellent judgment and sure technical grasp. Miss Scoville possesses pellucid technic and genuine musical feeling. Her tone was beautifully modulated. The last number of her group, in particular, was delivered with great spirit and brilliancy. Miss Hunt of Carthage has a voice of unusual volume and carrying power. The delivery of her songs was characterized by a pronounced musical intelligence. The accompaniments were excellently given by Mary Hunt Walker and Harold Leake.

On Tuesday night a concert was given by Joplin musicians exclusively. The program was opened by two numbers by the Apollo Club, Franklin B. Rogers conducting. "Sunset" by Van de Water, and "Winter Song" by Bullard, were sung with heartiness and generally with rythmical precision and good tone quality. Miss Blanche Bell played Chopin's difficult "Ballade in G Minor" with musical distinction and adequate technical power. It is a test piece, and the player met its requirements with assured ease. Rolleigh Montague was then heard in a group of songs: "I Send My Heart to Thee," Gena Branscomb; "Her Rose," Whitney Coombs; "The Veil of Night Has Fallen," Tchaikowsky and "Unfearing" by Bruno Huhn. He has a light tenor voice of beautiful quality, which he used with skill and effect. His legato is particularly good.

Oscar Wagner played Saint-Saens' "Allegro Appassionato" with much brilliancy and clarity of technic and rhythmical precision. The Schubert Ladies' Quartet, composed of four excellent voices, gave "In May" by Horatio Parker, "Indian Mountain Song" by Charles Cadman, and "Margareta" by C. B. Hawley. They have fine tone quality, very tasteful interpretations and were a pronounced success with the audience.

Mrs. Nora Molloy Cameron played Liszt's "Concert Study in F Minor" very beautifully and effectively.

Mr. Rogers sang "Fleeting Vision" (Herodiade), Massenet, "Bois Epais," Amadis 1684 by Sully and "Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves" (Scipio), Handel, with great dignity and pathos. The Handel number was particularly well given with all requisite breadth of style and with great volume of tone.

Miss Scoville again proved herself a true artist in "Concert Study," "Les Vagues" by Moszkowski.

Mr. George Winter's ringing tenor was never heard to better advantage than in his group, "A June Morning," Willeby, "Noon and Night," C. B. Hawley, "Homeward," Campbell-Tipton. His interpretations, although carefully studied, were always sustained by an enthusiasm that communicated itself to his audience in emphatic fashion.

The program was closed by two numbers by the Apollo Club, "Forget Me Not," Van Suppe, and "Ashes of Roses," Wolfe.

Following this a reception was tendered to the officers and members at the Connor Hotel.

Wednesday

A short business meeting was held at 9 o'clock at which it was decided that the association would issue teachers' certificates in violin, piano and voice, heretofore only certificates for piano having been issued. This was followed at 9:30 by the opening of the Round Table with F. B. Rogers as chairman of the vocal work, Lawrence W. Robbins, Kansas City chairman of organ, and Wort S. Morse, Kansas City, chairman of violin. A paper was read by W. L. Calhoun of Joplin, "The Rationale of Bach Study."

The formal opening, postponed from Tuesday, was held Wednesday morning. Burt W. Lyon made an address of welcome on behalf of the city of Joplin, and the executive committee, followed by a response from President Quarles.

At 2 o'clock the Missouri Composers' Concert was given. A group of piano pieces by Nannie Louise Wright of Fayette was skillfully played by Opal Hayes, also of Fayette. "The Juggler" proved to be a very effective concert number. Three pieces for organ by Edward Kreiser of Kansas City were played by James T. Quarles of St. Louis, whose masterly performance imparted interest to "A Processional March," "Cradle Song" and "Concert Caprice," the latter a clever piece written in idiom of the piano rather than the organ.

Two songs by Mrs. Laura Dye Carpenter of Joplin were well sung by George Winter, accompanied by Mrs. Winter. These songs, "Last Night and This" and "If You Were Mine," lie well for the voice and were interesting from their consistent handling of material.

An "Indian Legende" by Carl Busch, played by Vera Le Quay, is an effective violin piece and displays the easy craftsmanship of Missouri's most famous composer and his accomplished knowledge of the violin.

At 4:30 an ideal church service, open to the public, was given by the Missouri Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. The aim was to elevate the standing of church music. Examples of the ideal prelude, postlude. anthem and voluntary were given, and an address on "Church Music," was given by Rev. W. M. Cleaveland. The anthems were sung by the choir of St. Phillips Episcopal Church. At 6 o'clock the organists banqueted at the Connor Hotel.

The concert Wednesday night was to have been given exclusively by Kansas City artists. However, several substitutions were made on account of the absence of those scheduled to appear.

"Scherzo Symphonique," for organ by George Debat-Ponson, was finely played by Alfred G. Hubach, whose versatile musicianship as pianist, organist and ensemble player was strikingly evident throughout the day's program.

In the absence of George Deane four songs were given by George Winter of Joplin, a very acceptable substitute: "The Hills of Skye," V. Harris; "Uncle Rome," Sidney Homer; "Beneath the Apple Tree," Huhn; "If I Were You," Wells. These were beautifully accompanied by Mrs. Winter. Bach's "Concerto" for two violins and piano was played by Vera Le Quay and Wort L. Morse, violinists, Alfred G. Hubach, pianist, with all the repose and dignity required by this famous old piece, which in spite of its austerity was enthusiastically applauded.

Herbert Krumme of St. Joseph played Valse, Op. 42, Chopin; Fantasie Impromptu, Chopin, and Liszt's Concert Etude in D Flat with brilliant effect.

Mr. Morse reappeared as a soloist in Gartin's D Minor Concerto, with Cesar Thomson's Cadenza. He is a violinist of distinction, possessing an excellent left hand and a tone both powerful and brilliant. The double stopping in the long cadenza was invariably accurate.

Miss Nannie Louise Wright of Fayette closed the program with four pieces: Gavotte (from Suite, Op. 1) d'Albert; "On the Wings of Song," Mendelssohn-Liszt; "Sparks," Moszkowski; "Badinage," Chopin-Godowsky. Miss Wright's most striking quality is an extremely fine wrist technic. She played with fine effect and showed true musicianship.

Thursday

At 9:30 o'clock the following round table discussion was held: Piano, Miss Nannie Louise Wright, Fayette, chairman; subject, "The Value of Memorizing."

"Public School Music," P. O. Landon, Maryville, chairman.

"Harmony," John L. Biggerstaff, Kirksville, chairman.

Paper, "Keyboard Harmony," Effa Ellis, Kansas City.

Paul Wells, the distinguished Webb City pianist, who has been in Europe for a number of years, did not arrive in Joplin in time for his recital scheduled at 10:30 o'clock. The morning's program, therefore, was changed to an excursion to Lakeside Park, and the visitors enjoyed all the attractions of the summer resort.

At 3:00 o'clock a special train conveyed the visitors to the Country Club, where the remainder of the afternoon was spent in bathing, boating and tennis. A buffet supper was served at the club house, and an informal musicale and dance were enjoyed in the evening.

Friday

The annual election of officers was held at 9:00 o'clock, resulting in the re-election of the past officers for the ensuing year: James T. Quarles of St. Louis, president; Wort S. Morse, Kansas City, vice president, and Alfred G. Hubach, Kansas City, secretary-treasurer.

It was voted to hold the 1914 convention in February instead of June, the place to be decided by the committee of officers in September. A resolution was adopted by the association recommending that the teaching of music be compulsory in the public schools of the state. The president was instructed to prepare a petition signed by the musicians of the state to be presented to the state legislature. A standard for the violin was adopted which must be passed by all candidates for teachers' certificates. Standards for voice and organ will probably be adopted next year.

An amendment to the constitution, adding one dollar as an initiation fee for new members, raises the total membership fee to two dollars yearly.

At 2:00 o'clock a concert was given by Miss Rhetia Hesselberg, Joplin, violinist, James T. Quarles, pianist, and Miss Alma Putnam, accompanist. Mr. Quarles took the place of Basil D. Gauntlett, who was unable to be present.

At 4 o'clock the following program was given:

Piano, Sonata in D Minor.....Greig
Herbert Krumme, St. Joseph

Voice—
"Care Salve".....Handel
"Non connosci bel suol" ("Mignon").....Thomas
"Varnka's Song".....Stutzman
Miss Nira Wright, Carthage

Epigrams and Sayings for Young Musicians
by Horace D. Hitchcock
A pleasing gift book for anyone. Unique and original.
The Evening Sun of Baltimore says:
"Mr. Hitchcock's work is more sayings than epigrams, for the author seldom sacrifices a sound truth for a pretty phrase, and that very fact increases their helpfulness to the student of music, for they offer him indubitable wisdom in serious and dignified form."

INDIANAPOLIS

Mme. Lillian Adam Wiesike of Berlin gave a song recital at All Souls' Unitarian Church May 28. Her program included a number of the big operatic arias as well as lieder. Her voice is of a lyric quality but of unusual range for a soprano and excellent diction and remarkable purity of tone are marked characteristics of her singing. A large and enthusiastic audience was present.

The Indianapolis Conservatory Orchestra, Gaylord Yost, conductor, gave a concert at the Masonic Temple, June 13. The soloists were: Miss Mae Engle, pianist; Miss Cyrilla Humes, pianist; Miss May Dorsey, soprano, (all artist graduates of the Conservatory), Alfred Troemel and Harold Jaffe, violinists, pupils of Mr. Yost.

The program follows:

Overture, "Oberon" .....Weber
Orchestra

Concerto, Op. 64.....Mendelssohn
Mr. Jaffe

Concerto, A minor.....Grieg
Miss Humes

Jewel Song from "Faust".....Gounod
Miss Dorsey

Concerto, Op. 35.....Tschaikowsky
Mr. Troemel

Concerto, G minor.....Ed. Schuett
Miss Engle

Ase's Death from "Perr Gynt Suite".....Grieg
Anitra's Dance, from "Peer Gynt Suite".....Grieg
Orchestra

The soloists all acquitted themselves with great credit and their work shows that it is not necessary to go Europe for study. The orchestra supplied excellent accompaniments in all of the concertos and played with a rhythmical precision and artistic finish which was extremely pleasing to hear from a student orchestra.

The Indianapolis Conservatory of Music announces the engagement of three new artist teachers for its faculty, beginning September 1. Mr. Daniel Jones, American pianist, will take the place of Mr. Carl Beutel, who goes to Fort Worth, Tex., to assume directorship of the Texas Christian University Conservatory of Fine Arts. Mr. Charles H. Gabriel and Edith Howell Jones, pianist, have also been added to the faculty as well as Johann Berthelsen, baritone, who will have charge of the voice and operatic department. Mr. Gaylord Yost, who has made such a splendid name for himself as violinist, composer and teacher, will continue at the head of the violin department.

Comment of the local press was as follows:

A piano, voice and violin recital, the third number of the Schubert Conservatory of Music commencement series, was presented at Houck's Music Hall last night. Mozart's beautiful "Andante Sostenuto" was played with fine effect and perfect ensemble by Miss Schubert, violin, and Miss Battle, piano. In Bruch's violin concerto in G minor, as well as two manuscripts from the pen of Director Schubert, Miss Schubert again won her hearers by her artistic violin playing. She plays as only an artist can, mastery of the bow and extraordinary technic meeting all the demands set forth by the composers.

Director Schubert has written two beautiful violin novelties, "Feen Traum" (Fairy Dreams) and "Momens Hongroise" (Hungarian Moments). A local violinist of repute, commenting on these compositions, makes mention of these two works as "gems of real musical worth." Catherine Elizabeth Clark is a singer, who by sincerity of purpose and hard work has risen to such a degree as to be classed with the best, her singing of Lassen's "All Souls' Day," Arditi's "The Dove," Director Schubert's manuscript, "Come Thou, O Spring," and the very difficult Verdi aria, "Ah fors e lui" were great at all times. Her breathing, vocal technic and compass of voice in all stages were all that could be desired from any great artist.

Director Schubert can well feel proud of this pupil. Little Alphonse Schubert is rapidly ripening into a pianist that will make his mark. He has a fine sense of rhythm and plays with ease, showing control. Together with his father he gave a good accounting of Weber's "Marcia" in duet form. Misses Gothard, Williams and Morris, together with Director Schubert, gave an exceptional performance of Suppe's "Poet and Peasant" overture for two pianos. It was orchestral throughout. The audience was liberal with applause, showing their appreciation of all the performers. . . . . .

At the Warner Auditorium last night the closing exercises of the Schubert Conservatory of Music were held, the program befitting the occasion in a most brilliant manner. The opening number, Mendelssohn's "Hebriden Overture," was performed by the Misses Williams, Gothard and Freese with great eclat. The least detail of the composition, with its many intricate melodies, was given strict attention. Splendid shading of the dynamics was always in evidence. Miss Battle has developed into a pianist with fleet fingers, showing highly developed technic and a magnetic touch capable of producing beautiful tone effects. Verdi-Liszt's "Rigoletto" paraphrase was given an exceptional reading by her.

Catherine Elizabeth Clarke again showed her vocal virtuosity to even greater extent than ever before. Noteworthy was the ease and accuracy with which she sings the high C's. Such singing is a rarity and undoubtedly shows the success of the untiring efforts of both the possessor and instructor. Gomes' aria from "Il Guarany" is a test for the best in the art. This singer found no trouble in presenting the many difficulties to be mastered. Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen," probably one of the most difficult violin selections, was played with a large tone and a dash that was brilliant in the extreme by Miss Schubert. Her success was spontaneous.

Raynor.—Abigail Rayner, daughter of Alderman Walter J. Rayner, has just returned to America after a year spent in study with Charles W. Clark in Paris. After a month of visiting in the east, Miss Rayner will come to Chicago.

MUSIC IN CHICAGO

Absolutely deserving of particular mention, is the soubrette, Miss Doro Mavor, a young English girl of marked talent, unusually pretty, and the possessor of real charm. Mrs. Scott-Raff, Miss Mavor's instructor, has added to her list of successful pupils, another in the person of this member of "How Much Is a Million?" company. The work of Miss Mavor possesses that ease and finish which is the stamp of the artist.

MAJESTIC THEATER

Not for one minute does the Majestic have even a slight lapse in the excellence of the bill, during the summer. Down there one's sight is met with a full house at all times.

Gus Edwards, the prolific popular song writer, and his numerous "kiddies" are one of the few real vaudeville delights of the present day, and the audiences were quick to demonstrate their appreciation last week.

Cecil Lean & Co., are the headliners at the Majestic this week.

The Elderly Person

The Veteran looked quite spruce in his light gray suit and wide-brimmed Panama hat. "Why all this exceeding newness and freshness?" inquired the Elderly Person. "I'm really going," was the reply. "I've been debating it a long time. There were many pros and cons for me to turn about before I even submitted the idea to the youngsters who I then found had even more views about advisability than I had. Perhaps because they insisted that I was too old to take the jaunt, aided me in deciding that I wasn't. And so I shall put my badges and medals in my satchel and go off to Gettysburg and wear them at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the battle and the reunion of such of the blue and gray as are left of the original corps. We'll fight our battles over again, peaceably, this time I trust." "Good luck go with you," said the Elderly Person. "Be cautious about these word battles, however, and don't let them grow into something stronger."

A few days later it looked as if some men had not been as well advised, or at least remembered caution as well as the Veteran, for the Blues and the Grays got into a real scrimmage at the battlefield. And they used knives to support their arguments. Quite in the atmosphere of the sixties was that, for the day of the Bowie knife was not then gone by. An ugly looking dirk was that weapon devised by Brother Bowie, and not infrequently found in the belt of the "unterrified," as certain rabid supporters of the slavery tenets were often called. The flareup should not have been a surprise. The bitterness has been handed down in the south among certain people whose personal loss and suffering is not to be measured by the larger benefit resulting. And not many conquerors wear their victorious trophies unobtrusively.

The boy who afterwards became a man was not twelve years old when he felt the influences of one Fourth of July and knew that something special was brewing somewhere. There was expectancy in the air. The customary celebrations of antebellum days of Independence day itself, when there were barbecues and community picnics, had been pushed aside by more serious matters. On such occasions the rising young lawyer tried his oratorical wings and made the eagle scream in a patriotic speech, and a nervous young woman read a poem. To the clergyman fell the privilege of reading the document beginning "When in the course of human events." Sometimes he was so sincere that he cleared his throat often as he thought of the heroism which went into the utterance of these doughty but well weighed words. Small wonder that one nervous man perspired freely when they were first spoken, and said anxiously, as he mopped his forehead, "Gentleman, we must all hang together in this," to be met by the grim humor of the reply, "If we don't all hang together we'll probably hang separately." Was it Ben Franklin who thus spoke? In 1863 things were being tried out cruelly and the full import of a man's right to be born free, if not equal, was being in the most complete sense threshed out.

The boy was doubtless barefooted with an accompanying rag tied about a "stumped" toe. Late in a July afternoon he felt that he and the other fellows must find out what had happened on the Fourth to so stir matters. In and out among the tents of the soldiers and on the parade ground, near the hospitals, the railroad station, the officers' quarters and the quartermaster's departments they nosed and lounged. But it was not until after the late summer night's darkness had fallen that they or anyone learned fully the results of that momentous day's work. The long siege of Vicksburg was over and the attempted military invasion of the northern states had been so completely checked that it was never tried again. The very flower of General Lee's army had been mowed down at Gettysburg in that memorable event now historically known as "Pickett's charge." The battle had lasted two days and ceaseless cannonading by an array of artillery so great that there is no chronicle of its equal, had punctuated the long hours of the third day and ceased only because the guns were so heated that it was dangerous to reload them. Mistaking the silence of the federal batteries, Lee supposed them to be quieted because of lack of ammunition, and eagerly hurried to cap his sheaf of imagined victory with a sharp assault by infantry that should make of the defeat a veritable rout. How disastrous was the result of this action, and how these splendid soldiers were cut down by the renewed fire from the batteries, which substituted the small shot of grape and shrapnel for the larger shells and making wide swaths in the ranks, soon supplemented by the infantry fusillade which rained bullets into the refilled gaps—is it not all written and rewritten in the books of record? The group of northern states which had been threatened and would have had to turn into defenders, instead of assailants, breathed a great sigh of relief at the retirement of the threatening army. Thereafter Lee was largely on the defensive and had plenty to do in looking after the activities of that quiet man who, like a tenacious bulldog, had been determinedly watching the Mississippi city on a hill, which had finally capitulated to his will. General Grant learned early in the war a truth which had much to do with his invincibility. He found out that the other man was just as much afraid of him and his forces as he was afraid of the other man and his armament. This put personal conditions on an equality, and then he followed up this truism with another one which traditionally descends from battlefield to battlefield—namely, that God is on the side of the strong battalions. Lee's reminiscences and letters tell of Grant's amazement at the small number of men with which Lee gave the impression that he had great strength in the final skirmishes of the war. Grant met these sallies and engagements by piling up more and more reserves, so that there was simply no conceivable resistance to what was overpowering. So had he sieged Vicksburg.

The impromptu celebration of these two events when they were but a day or two old brought to the children in those parts where the Elderly Person was a boy the first signal vision of what are usually called Japanese lanterns. Those swinging, folding, red, white and blue and starry collapsibles seem to date from the civil war period. The colors certainly are not Japanese and it is to be inferred that the construction is indicated rather than the patriotic candle bearer itself. The center of the celebration was not on the business street of the town, but on a side residence street in front of the home of two maiden ladies of well known and drastic abolition principles. In the settlement where the sentiments were much divided and neighbors entertained opposing points of view these women had endured much odium in the opening days of the unpleasantness when the state itself was in a wavering attitude as to whether it should secede or not. They had, figuratively, "laid low" all during the uncertainties and kept their houses loyally dark while the confederates celebrated loudly their early victories. They had not hidden their staunch loyalty and were ready with sturdy arguments to uphold what they stood for. But they were not quarrelsome, and so were not molested. Other women were not so wise. There were tales in plenty of harshnesses practiced upon those who boasted that they carried a prohibited flag next their person.

In the long one-story cottage—on a true southern terrace, with wide entrance holding glass panels either side the door and a flaring fan-shaped transom, and a portico in front with a trellis covered with honeysuckle—every window had a row of candles at its base and where the sashes divided. On the lower branches of the tall cedar trees hung the new magical lanterns. And from the trellises of the porch were the hastily made transparencies of red, white and blue tissue paper, built up from bits of lath nailed together in squares and the paper pasted on with the paste made of flour and water. Muscilage was not so plentiful and the local efforts with sticky substances still left the old fashioned paste the reliable adherent. Of course the stars and stripes were there, very still in the hot summer evening air. The song the soldiers sang of the "Bonnie Blue Flag" referred to it as carrying thirty-four stars. The opposing "Stars and Bars" used the same melody but sang of the flag with the thirteen stars. The little grandchild of today counts forty-eight on the bunting floating from the cottage porch.

Memory does not preserve any definite details of the doings. The man just recalls the figures of the prim ladies with long curls on either side their faces fanning themselves, and moving among the people who found themselves drawn together in that brotherhood of interests now wondrously forwarded. The boy was in every corner of the yard hearing, seeing, absorbing, and the memory cells have been loyal. The vision is perfect even if it is dim—and the sense of the greatness of the moment is unforgetable. But if there were spoken words they did not live. Perhaps like all really vital moments of life or experience, the words are the smallest part and being ephemeral and quite fitly float away.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

Emanuel.—Harrison Emanuel, a young violinist of Chicago, made a very successful appearance in Louisville last week. Mrs. Speed, a wealthy patron of art of that city, bought fifty tickets for the use of her friends and the comment of the press was very flattering. In a recent recital at Waukegan, Ill., Mr. Emanuel also made great success, the Waukegan Sun the next day predicting that he would become one of the most famous of players.

Boydston.—Miss Florence G. Boydston, who was to have played organ solos at the closing concert of the summer series at the New First Congregational Church, was unable to do so because of the fact that the organ had already been dismantled, preparatory to the complete overhauling it will be given. She, however, was accompanist (piano) throughout the program and again proved her fine musicianship and her versatility.

———♯♯♯———

Robinson.—Miss Carol Robinson, an assistant to Mme. Zeisler, has closed a most sucessful season, and leaves this week for her home in Springfield to pass her summer vacation.

———♯♯♯———

Wycoff.—Miss Eva Emmet Wycoff is the soprano soloist for July at Chautauqua, N. Y. During the month she will appear in Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Verdi's "Il Trovatore" and the Handel "Messiah."

NEW MUSIC FROM DITSON

The Oliver Ditson Company sends a most interesting list of books and music this month, some of the items being as follows: "Method for Guitar" (Carcassi), revised by G. C. Santisteban. The preface reads as follows:

In revising the well known work of Carcassi, I am answering the imperative need heretofore felt for a modern method that will elevate the guitar to the place it justly deserves, among the notable advancements of the art of music.

The additions, suppressions, changes of fingerings, and departures from the original order of the exercises, are all innovations that have suggested themselves to me, in my many years experience as teacher and player.

During the course of the exercises I have made numerous annotations, which together with the illustrations found in the text, will tend to facilitate the handling of the work and to make its comprehension extremely easy.

I firmly believe that the present edition, revised with care, will be welcomed by my colleagues and by amateurs, who will find valuable instruction as well as amusement in the exercises it contains.

"Song of the Seraglio." A cycle of four songs for high voice, by Granville Bantock, to lyrics by Helen F. Bantock. The titles of the songs are: "The Odalisque," "A Persian Love Song," "Lament of the Bedouin Slave Girl" and "The Demon of Mazinderan."

Sabbath Morning Service for the Synagogue (according to the Union Prayer Book), by James H. Rogers.

MUSIC FROM POND

New editions of William A. Pond & Co., of New York include the following: "A Green Hill" (sacred solo); "Because You Love Me," "Say 'Yes,' Marie," by A. L. Powell. "The Love Ship," words by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, music by William M. Hutchinson; "Oh Light of Truth" (sacred); "Place o' Dreams" by Charles W. Cadman; "Sweet Dreams of Paradise;" "God Is Love;" "O Mother Dear, Jerusalem," and "A Fireside Song," H. J. Storer; "Dear, When I Gaze," James H. Rogers; "Where-e'er You Walk" (Semele), Arr. by William H. Callcott; "Waiting" Harrison Millard; "Perfect Peace," William Dressler; "Nearer My God to Thee," Joseph Fletcher, and "Not Ashamed of Christ," Danks.

COMPOSITIONS BY ARMSTRONG

"O Word of God Incarnate," mixed voices, (dedicated to E. M. Bowman), and "Arise, O Lord" for Male Voices, (dedicated to Clarence Dickinson) Octavo editions by Breitkopf and Hartel.

"A Love Song," medium voice; "A Song of Shadows," high voice, and "Divided" for medium voice (Breitkopf and Hartel).

WITMARK & SONS

Good songs sent out by M. Witmark & Sons include the following: "My Days Are in His Hands" (sacred), Ernest R. Ball; "Thou Art My God," Charles B. Blount; "Daphne's Blushing Cheeks," W. Franke-Harling, and "Saviour, Master, Make Me Thine" by Kate Vannah.

STUDIO PUBLISHING COMPANY

The Studio Publishing Company has sent out three more exquisite songs by William Lester, set to texts from the poetic pen of Mary Louise Dawson. These songs are "Rockabye Town" (low voice); "Hushabye, My Baby," (low voice), and "Just as I Am" (sacred) for high voice.

THE SUCCESSFUL MUSIC TEACHER

This is the title of a small, but very interesting paper bound book by Herbert Antcliffe, which has just been sent out by Augener of London.

IT IS ENOUGH

A well written novel, with original characters and fascinating plot by Harriet Russell Campbell. Published in very attractive form by the Harpers.

DEDICATED TO MR. CLIPPINGER

"My Bonnie Lass She Smileth" (old English text) has been most carefully and characteristically set for mixed chorus by George B. Nevin, dedicated to Mr. D. A Clippinger. The work is to be sung by the Madrigal Club of Chicago during the coming season.

BOSTON MUSIC COMPANY

The Boston Music Company sends out an interesting series of octavo pieces by Oliver King, Fred H. Young, H. Saunders, Philip James, Clough-Leighter, J. L. Gailbraith, W. Francke-Harling, B. Campbell, J. L. Hammond and W. Berwald.

NOTES OF THE OPERA

An operatic feast, or rather a series of feasts, is promised for Chicago during the coming season by the Chicago Grand Opera Company. Operas never before heard in this city are to be brought here. Many of them will be sung in English. Artists who have delighted crowned heads with their musical and dramatic ability will interpret the various roles. Some of the singers will appear here for the first time.

The operas to be given in English on Saturday nights during the coming season will include "Martha," "Giaconda," "Faust," "Cinderella," "Madame Butterfly," "Tales of Hofmann," "Cricket on the Hearth," and a triple bill embracing "The Lovers' Quarrel," "The Secret of Susanne" and "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Carolina White, Maggie Teyte, Alice Zeppilli and Ruby Heyl are among the singers to appear in these operas.

One of the treats that is promised is the production of the new opera, "Don Quixote," and it is possible that Marceaux, the popular baritone, who sang the title role of this opera in Paris, will appear here. The Chicago Grand Opera Company will be the first organization in this country to present this opera.

Some of the most famous artists in high C roles now on the operatic stage will be included in the battery of tenors to be presented. They will include Charles Dalmores, Lucien Muratore, Alessandro Bonci, Amadeo Bassi, the noted lyric tenor who delighted Chicagoans during the season of 1911; Edmund Warnery, Artistedmo Georgini, Leon Campagnola and Glenn Hall.

Giuseppe Sturanni, originally the conductor for the Manhattan Opera Company, has been engaged as conductor for the Chicago Grand Opera Company the coming season. Maestro Campanini, however, has agreed to conduct the performance of "Madame Butterfly" in English when it is given as one of the Saturday night productions.—Chicago Examiner.

EDITORIAL

ing classes and the evenings with music of fine grade.

The recitals of Day Williams and John Doane Jr., are noted elsewhere in this issue of Music News. On Tuesday a program was given and this (Friday) evening Electa Austin, pianist, and Mr. Charles E. Lutton, baritone, will be heard at Music Hall of the University.

Later programs are to be given by Arne Oldberg, Carl Beecher and Walter Allen Stults, of the Northwestern Faculty, as also a piano and song program by Frances Stults and Claire Livingston.

Here is one conscientious musician at least. We notice in an eastern music paper that George Hamlin has "declined" to sing in opera in Europe next season because he will not break faith with the managers who have booked a concert tour in America for him.

THE CHARM OF THE WORLD'S ARTISTS—

Is the supreme devolopment among musical instruments—the Starr Piano. The most critical requirements of the musician are abundantly satisfied in this unique instrument. It has been accorded marked preference in the aristocratic homes of America and numbers among its enthusiastic patrons musicians of world-wide renown.

This instrument has attained such a high standing because of its unequaled musical qualities. Its unique, sweet singing tone affords perfect support to the voice and proves a never-ending delight to the pianist. Its artistic design of case, with its superb finish, is as instrumental in endearing it to the hearts of the present generation as it was to those who have passed.

OCEAN GROVE

Unquestionably the one big event for August in the music world will be the organists' convention at Ocean Grove, N. J.

Originally and still primarily a camp meeting ground, Ocean Grove has yet one of the most glorious concert rooms in America in its Auditorium; and its living arrangements are typically vacational in style and effect. The hotels are comfortable and there is a perfect city of tents and cottages, all of them hidden in a maze of trees and shrubbery, while the whole place is delightfully cool and, strange as the statement may appear, absolutely free from mosquitoes.

However, the secker for a summer's vacation who wishes some excitement need not taboo Ocean Grove on that account, for while he may go there and bury himself in the woods and live only for the musical feasts which are provided daily at the Auditorium, he can, if he wishes, simply walk up to the Ocean Shore, where the famous Board Walk will provide all the "life" he may require, and if he wants very real "circus life" he need only cross over the border line into Asbury Park and he will find excitement in as great scope and varicty as though he were at Atlantic City itself.

To the general musician the daily concerts and the big festival events which occur almost continuously throughout the summer constitute the greatest attraction at Ocean Grove, of course, and to the organist the great convention, which is dated for August 4 to August 9, is the supreme attraction.

Elsewhere in Music News is found a detail of this convention, and also several views of Ocean Grove which will prove interesting to those who intend visiting the New Jersey resort in August.

Music News will take great pleasure in reporting this convention in very full detail.

MONUMENT TO NEVIN

A movement is on foot to erect a suitable monument in Pittsburgh to the memory of Ethelbert Nevin, the composer. No more characteristic writer has yet appeared in this country and his music has cheered the hearts of thousands. Certainly every musician of the country will be glad to help in the movement to properly mark his last resting place when opportunity is given them.

The following clipping is taken from the Pittsburgh "Times" of recent date:

By means of funds raised by subscriptions, and through a public concert which will be given some time during the coming winter, a committee of men and women prominent in Sewickley Valley music circles, are planning the erection of a memorial monument over the grave of Ethelbert Woodbridge Nevin, the composer, in the Sewickley Cemetery.

At present no monument marks Nevin's resting place, which overlooks the Sewickley Valley, where he was born. He died in New Haven, Conn., in 1901, and was buried in the family lot, beside the graves of his father, Robert P. Nevin, his mother, Elizabeth Oliphant Nevin, and three brothers and sisters.

OUR OWN LINE O' SWIPE

The announcement of the Apollo Theater that "Mary Stuart in three parts" is being presented there brings to mind the old query as to whose fate was preferable—that of Mary, Queen of Scots or Joan of Arc? Certainly, no one ought to hesitate as between a Hot Stake and Two Cold Chops.

Worst Ever

Two weeks since I reproduced Mr. John Stapleton Cowley-Brown's ecstatic welcome of Samuel Bowman Peck's volume of poems, "Perceptions," as a collection of supremely exquisite chryselephantine verses. Since then I have read the poems. They are Ezra Pound stricken with paresis and locomotor ataxia. They are the worst verse written by anyone, alive or dead. Which shows that my dear friend Mr. John Stapleton Cowley-Brown, of the Chicago Musical Leader, and the Ten-Story Magazine, has fallen into the bad habit of reviewing books before reading them.—The St. Louis Mirror.

Full Value Wanted

Mrs. Brown went to buy a new piece for her little daughter.

"Yes, please show me a piece of music for about second grade. How much? Twenty cents? Oh, I want something harder than that, her last piece cost thirty-five cents. Haven't you something for about forty or forty-five?"—Cincinnati Conservatory Sharps and Flats.

This woman was probably some relation to the Chicago woman who went to Summy's and asked for "Mendelssohn's Songs Without Music."

Besides being a play which is extremely pretty and artistic, "When Dreams Come True" has a lot of clever repartee, as for instance: When Hercules Strong says "What! a deaf and dumb woman! Why, there ain't no such thing," or when he asks Kean Hedges what he "does for a living" and that precocious boy answers succinctly, "Father." The best quip in the piece, however, is that perpetrated by May Vokes as Mathilda. She is hidden under a table and told to remain there quietly. After a long time she is discovered by Strong, who asks, "What are you doing there?" "Mildewing," says the literal Mathilda. And, by the way, May Vokes is certainly a big hit in the part she plays, pressing Joseph Santley close for first place in the affections of the big audiences going nightly to the Garrick. If she would cut out her one "smut" song she would be absolutely above reproach.

His Busy Time

"Doctor, why don't you take a vacation?"

"I can't now; my patients need me. They are beginning to come back from their vacations."—Courier-Journal.

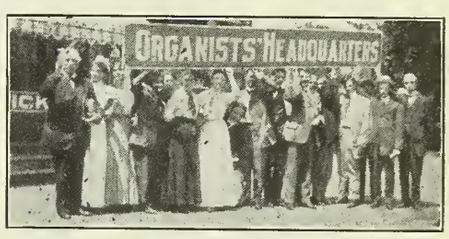
THE CONVENTION PROGRAM

Owing to the good offices of Mrs. B. S. Keator, of Asbury Park, the N. A. O. has been favored with the opportunity of hearing no less than six recitals given on the fine Austin organ in the First Methodist Church at Asbury Park. The Auditorium at Ocean Grove is a "busy" building. Its multitude of engagements has always rendered necessary the confining of the sessions of the convention to rather narrow limits of time, involving quite frequently the abandonment of discussion on a subject just when it was reaching its zenith in point of interest. Mrs. Keator has told us that the First M. E. Church, with its fine organ, is "ours" for the whole of convention week. It is quite needless to say how very much the N. A. O. appreciates this splendid courtesy, and at the right time proper acknowledgment of it will be made.

Organists for the Convention

The most recent name to be added to the list of convention organists is that of Dr. Percy J. Starnes, organist of the Auditorium, Atlanta, Ga. Dr. Starnes will play the recital in the Ocean Grove Auditorium on Thursday evening, August, 7. He is extremely well known in musical affairs in New York state, having been organist and choirmaster of All Saints' Cathedral, Albany, for several years.



GROUPS OF ORGANISTS AT THE LAST OCEAN GROVE CONVENTION

In speaking of the convention organists our thoughts naturally turn first to the gentleman who has so recently come among us, Mr. T. Tertius Noble, organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas' Church, New York, who resigned a corresponding position at York Minster, England, in order to come to New York. Everyone knows the high standard of excellence of Mr. Noble's compositions, and we count ourselves most fortunate in being furnished with this opportunity of hearing his masterful work on the organ.

Mr. Arthur H. Turner, the organist and choirmaster of Trinity Methodist Church, at Springfield, Mass., is so well known to those who are frequent attenders at the convention, that comments on his work is almost needless. Mr. Turner has instituted two very important reforms in the organ world of his town, first in the giving of organ recitals to which admission was charged, secondly in establishing the postlude as an integral part of the church service. Mr. Turner says that the postlude at Trinity Church is no longer considered as a mere "filler-in," nor yet, we venture to add, as an "emptier." More power to him for his courage.

The writer of these notes was organist-in-charge at Festival Hall, St. Louis, during the fair of 1904. Of the seventy-five organists who gave recitals on the great organ, there were a few agreeable "surprises," and Mr. William H. Gage was certainly one of them. His work as an organist is not nearly so well known as it should be. He combines an almost prodigious technic with very original and excellent ideas of interpretation. Mr. Gage, who studied with the famous Frederick Archer, was organist and choirmaster at the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., for seven years. He now holds a similar position at the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Montclair, N. J.

Mr. J. J. Miller, of Norfolk, Va., has held positions at First Congregational Church, Springfield, Ill.; Cathedral of St. John, Quincy, Ill., and Grace Church, Middleton, N. Y., where he was also supervisor of music in the public schools. He is now organist and choirmaster at Christ Church, Norfolk, Va., a position he has held for twenty-four years. He conducts Spring Festivals, gives many organ recitals, and has had notable success as a trainer of choir boys.

Mr. Clifford Demarest, F. A. G. O., organist and choirmaster of the Church of The Messiah, New York, is almost as well known in the N. A. O. as he is in The American Guild of Organists, which splendid institution he represents in the giving of his recital at the convention. Mr. Demarest has written extensively for the organ, and his compositions are found on many programs. He is the author of a book entitled, "Hints on Organ Accompaniments," and writes for several musical journals. Mr. Demarest was secretary of The American Guild of Organists for four years.

Papers to Be Read

A paper of great interest will undoubtedly be the one presented by Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, organist and choirmaster at Southwark Cathedral, London, the services of which church became justly famous for their excellent music during his incumbency. His subject at the convention will be "The Essential Elements of Churchly Music," and every organist in the land should have the opportunity to profit by hearing an address on so important a topic, delivered by so great an authority. In this connection it will be well to state here that arrangements have been made for the publication of the convention papers in Music News, the special Saturday Supplement of The New York Evening Post, and other musical journals, so that all may have the opportunity of reading them.

Mr. William D. Armstrong, of Alton, Ill., is certainly one of the best known musicians of the Middle West. He has been director of music at Shurtleff College, and the Western Military Academy, and was also president of the Illinois State Music Teachers Association. He has also held important organ positions in St. Louis and other western cities. Mr. Armstrong's paper at the convention will deal with "Hymns—Their Use and Abuse."

William A. Wolf, Mus. Doc., for the past twelve years has been organist and choirmaster of the Moravian Church at Lancaster, Pa., and during his incumbency the music of this church has attained a high standard of proficiency. At present he is also director of the Institute of Musical Art of the city of Lancaster. His work as a teacher has brought him much recognition.

His life study and exposition of the church music, the chorale, etc., have helped to reveal their dignity, solidity and beauty in no small degree. For two years he was a member of the executive committee of the National Association of Organists. His subject will be "Music of the Moravian Church."

Special attention is to be given at the convention to a proper consideration of the music of the church from the purely congregational standpoint. The program committee, in its endeavor to have this important subject dealt with in a thoroughly satisfactory manner invited Mr. McAll to take entire charge of the session devoted to its consideration. Mr. Reginald Lee McAll has been organist and choirmaster at the Church of the Covenant, New York, since 1902. He took his A. B. degree at the Johns Hopkins University in 1900, and studied organ, voice and harmony at the Peabody Conservatory, in Baltimore. He has been specially interested in the various musical problems of the smaller churches, and also in the music of the Sunday school. In dealing with his subject, which is named "Church Music of the Congregational Type," Mr. McAll has been good enough to furnish an outline of the plan of the session, which is here given in his own words:

"The subject of this session will be the church organist's relation to the congregation, and his responsibility for its share in the services. The main divisions of this topic will be indicated in the first paper, to be read by the chairman (McAll). What qualifications should the organist have to fit him for this part of his work? How can he make the people read well? What should he know about hymns and their tunes? How shall he fit his interpretation of them to the needs of his own congregation? What are its limitations and excellences? How to plan for great congregational singing. How to play hymns so that all people can sing them. The question of breathing places or pauses. This will be illustrated by Mr. L. K. LeJeune, organist of St. Stephen's church. New York, who will show his own method of treating the modern type of tune. Another theory producing the same results will be mentioned by Mr. Fred Schlieder, organist of St. Nicholas' Collegiate Church, New York, also illustrated by the rendering of well-known tunes.

"So much for the present congregation. How about that of the future? What can the organist do to help the future adults? Consider value of proper attention to the Sunday school. Impossibility of securing good results without making use of the tremendous resources of our public schools. Mr. Moritz E. Schwarz, solo organist at Trinity Church, New York, will speak of this latter field. telling what is being done, and also indicating the opportunity of improvement. Mr. Schwarz has had a wide experience as supervisor of music in the public schools of Jersey City, in addition to his noteworthy work as a church organist and composer. In the discussion of this point several other educators are expected to take part.

"When the material which this source will afford has been thoroughly canvassed, how shall the organist give the special training which should refine and develop these young voices? No more important field can be mentioned, and in order to show how this can be done, Dr. Madeley Richardson has promised to make a practical demonstration of the way to train boys' voices. This address will be invaluable to the organist, as choirmaster, as director of the various junior singing organizations, and also when he does practical work in the public schools. Ample opportunity will be given to ask questions of practical interest, and a lively discussion is expected."

THE AUDITORIUM FROM THE BOARDWALK

While on the choir subject, it is pleasant to be able to announce that Dr. J. S. Van Cleve, of New York, the well known musician, critic and writer on musical topics, is to address the convention. His subject will be an eclectic one, dealing chiefly with the incongruities in the selections given by soloists in the church service, the title being "Development of the Spiritual in the Music of the Church."

having secured the services of Mr. Charles E. Watt, who will read a paper at the convention on "Musical Journalism." Mr. Watt is the editor of "Music News," published in Chicago, a journal that is growing more and more in favor with the organists, and deservedly so. The New York organist, in his "provincial" moments, cannot hear mention of "Musical Journalism" without thinking of Mr. Williamson of the "Evening Post," who has done such splendid work for the A. G. O. and the N. A. O. Mr. Watt will find, however, that the members of the N. A. O. will still have plenty of room for him in their hearts without in the least degree crowding out Mr Williamson.

A paper of sterling merit is sure to be that of Mr. James W. Hill, who speaks on "The Problem of the Organist in the Smaller Cities." Mr. Hill is organist and choirmaster at the First Universalist Church at Haverhill, Mass., a position he has held since 1879 (thirty-four years). On one of his many visits to Europe Mr. Hill gave a series of organ recitals in London, in 1890. He is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music and was on the teaching staff of that institution for eight years. He gives a series of recitals every year on the fine Hutchings organ in his church at Haverhill and spends a goodly portion of his time in teaching in Boston.

Mr. Robert M. Treadwell, organist of the Temple of Labor, New York, lives at Arlington, N. J., at which place he has been instrumental in forming a local club for organists that has proved to be very successful. Mr. Treadwell is going to tell the convention all about the club, this fitting in very nicely with his ethical subject, "My Brother Organist," and as he enjoys the habit of "thinking strongly," his presentation of this matter is quite sure to be interesting.

Miss Henrietta Osborne Crane of Baltimore, in addition to making her report as state president of the Maryland Council, will give an address on the subject "The Advantages of Vested Choirs." Miss Crane is a graduate of the Peabody Institute in Baltimore, and until quite recently was organist and choirmaster at the Memorial Episcopal Church in that city.

Mr. Walter N. Waters, the general secretary of the N. A. O., is organist of the Church of St. Michael's (Passionist Monastery), West Hoboken, N. J. He was organist at the Epiphany R. C. Church, New York, for ten years, and has taught harmony and organ at the National Conservatory in New York for a like period, and sight singing in Jersey City public schools for twelve years. Mr. Waters' paper at the convention will be devoted to the reading of and commenting on "Instruction in Church Music," beginning "Motu Proprio," which the present pope, Pius X., issued in 1903.

The writer feels that any remarks as to the career of Mr. Homer N. Bartlett would be entirely superfluous. There is not a better musician in the country, nor one regarded with more affection by those who have the privilege of working with him. His subject will be "Orchestration for the Organist."

Mr. Chester H. Beebe, organist and choirmaster of the Janes Methodist Episcopal Church in Brooklyn, and principal of the School of Music and Public Performance in the same borough, is the national treasurer of the N. A. O. The title of his address will be "The Perfunctory Musician," and Mr. Beebe will impress on the minds of all the necessity for a constant striving after high ideals on the part of the organist.

Mr. James Pearce, Mus. Bac., now of Yonkers, N. Y., may safely be called the dean of the N. A. O. His extremely lengthy and highly learned work in the musical service of the church will be sufficient guarantee that his paper, "Three Defects," will contain some wholesome advice to the organist. Mr. Pearce was at the Quebec Cathedral for three and a half years; at St. Mark's Church, Philadelphia, for seven years, and at Christ Church, Fifth avenue, for fourteen years.

Mr. Newton J. Corey of Detroit, in addition to giving one of the convention recitals, will say a few words relating to what he terms "The Oblong Nuisance," this having reference, of course, to the shape of a good deal of organ music.

Mrs. E. B. Summers of Keokuk, Ia., is an organist of far more than ordinary ability. She is a pupil of Edwin Lemare. In her address, "The Organ Recital as a Civic Asset," she is to tell the convention of her efforts to interest municipalities in the south and middle west in the concert hall organ scheme. She has also proffered her aid in the discussions on church music. If opportunity presents itself, Mrs. Summers will be invited to give a recital on the Asbury Park organ.

Mr. Arthur Scott Brook is private organist to Hon. William A. Clark, Fifth avenue, New York; and to Mr. S. Milton Schatzkin of Elliot Manor, Rutherford, N. J. He is also organist at the Church of the Strangers (Deems Memorial), New York. He was the first organist and director of music at the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, California, and was organist in charge at Festival Hall, St. Lonis, during the fair of 1904. He is well known as an organ expert, being chairman of committee on organ construction and improvement in connection with the N. A. O. His paper will be devoted to propaganda work, and is entitled "How Can the Scope of the National Association Be Widened?"

Of others who will take a promient part in the convention, the name of Mr. Frederick Schlieder at once commands attention. Mr. Schlieder is the chairman of the national executive committee and chairman of the program committee. His work in connection with the N. A. O. has been most faithfully performed and has been of the utmost assistance in guiding the association through its somewhat turbulent journey of the past year. Mr. Schlieder is the organist and choirmaster of the St. Nicholas Collegiate Church, New York.

It surely must be left to the convention itself to give suitable expression of its appreciation of the splendid work done by its worthy president, Dr. J. Christopher Marks, and no program could ever be considered complete that did not make proper provision for recognition of the work accomplished by Dr. Marks and his enthusiastic wife, who has been a tower of strength to every member of the national committee. Furthermore, the N. A. O. would be guilty of even grosser neglect if the prodigious and gratifying achievements of the national superintendent, Mr. Tali Esen Morgan, were not most thankfully recognized by the convention. As standardization has been in the air so much of late, Mr. Morgan has hit on the happy title of "Standardization of the Organist" for his paper.

Most of the papers to be read at the convention are on subjects that invite very considerable discussion. An exchange of views on the various topics is not only permissible but absolutely necessary for the greater success of the convention. Indeed, according to the measure of the exchange of ideas, must the success of the convention be judged. Opportunity will be given for discussion on the different subjects, and it is urged on those present to enter into the proper convention spirit and give of their best, with perfect frankness, in the discussions.

The old saying, "All work, no play," etc., is known to everybody. The conventions, and indeed all meetings of the N. A. O., have never failed to furnish evidence of the first class that organists have a splendid capacity for the enjoyment of "The Lighter Vein." Even royal courts have had their professional fun-makers. Mr. Raphael Navarro, chairman of the Convention Rumpus Club, is as mum as a monk of medieval memory as to just what is going to happen at his court of fun. He, however, having a reputation for gentleness, combined with a pronounced proclivity for pleasurable pastimes, is sure to provide a "rumpus course" that shall thoroughly satisfy all.

Other Features

Music News has given a detail of the various organ recitals which are to occur during the week at Ocean Grove and also at the M. E. Church in Asbury Park, just across the border line from Ocean Grove.

A daily organ recital is given on the splendid organ in the Auditorium at Ocean Grove, and this closes invariably with a performance of "The Storm," which has grown to be one of the institutions of the place.

On Saturday night, August 9, "The Messiah" will be given with a gigantic chorus recruited from Ocean Grove and New York, the great organ, a full orchestra and splendid soloists, under the direction of Tali Esen Morgan.

Ballmann.—After a very successful season at Riverview and Forest Park Mr. Martin Ballmann left Chicago on July 22 with his band to fulfill an eleven days' engagement at Galveston, Tex. Mr. Ballmann has courageously, during the past few years, introduced works of the finest caliber into his programs along with the popular numbers which are demanded by a large part of the audiences and the result is that a Ballmann concert has something in it for every one who hears it. The Galveston programs are arranged with especially great skill.

Music in Chicago

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERTS

The second of the summer night concerts at the Warren Avenue Congregational Church introduced the Chicago Concert Trio, an organization which at this time demonstrated in no uncertain terms its ability to please the public in exceptional way.

The personnel of this organization is

MARJORIE DODGE WARNER

Albert E. Fox, pianist; William Hofman, violinist, and Marjorie Dodge Warner, soprano.

Mr. Fox and Mr. Hofman, besides being artists in their solo work have, through long practice, evolved an ensemble which is very remarkable for its surety no less than in the fact that it is marked by artistry of a very pronounced degree also.

Mrs. Warner is a soprano who has been blessed with fine presence and who is charming in her demeanor before an audience. Her voice is rich, full and warm and has also an extended range. She is able to manage the very high tones of a coloratura scale with entire conviction, but her chief charm lies in the fact that in the medium range her voice is of melting beauty and is managed by her in a way to show the most musical qualities of whatever songs she undertakes to present to her public.

She began her work on last Thursday by singing the famous "Ave Maria," from the Bruch "Cross of Fire," with wonderfully fine dramatic touch and also with a very continuous and a very satisfactory musical beauty.

For her second group she sang first with classic simplicity, "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair" (Haydn), and Cadman's exquisite "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water," which she invested with even more than its customary charm.

Ware's "Wind and Lyre" next engaged attention and this was followed by a very piquant reading of the excellent "De Sun's Not Los'" by Daniel Protheroe, and the group closed with a charming reading of Kucken's "Heaven Hath Shed a Tear," which was nothing short of delightful in the presentment made by Mrs. Warner, in which she was assisted by both Mr. Fox and Mr. Hofman.

Mr. Fox chose for his solo group a movement from Beethoven and an "Impromptu" by Schubert, which were played with fine musicianship and very beautiful musical qualities, and the eighth "Hungarian Rhapsodie" by Liszt, an opus played in public very seldom but which is much better than some of the rhapsodies which are much more frequently given and which at this time proved Mr. Fox to have a virtuoso technical equipment as well as reaffirming his splendid musicianship and good taste.

Mr. Hofman played for his first solo bit a "Serenade" by Drdla with much of charm, and in the "Gypsy Dance" by Sarasate proved himself the possessor of great fluency of technic also.

The great musical treat of the concert, however, lay in the ensemble numbers provided by Mr. Fox and Mr. Hofman, i. e.,

ALBERT E. FOX

the "Sonata," Op. 13, by Grieg, in its entirety, two movements from the Gade "Sonata, Op. 21" and the "Rondo a la Russe" from the "Suite Op. 44," by Schuett.

Throughout this work each artist proved his entire fitness for such endeavor and the ensemble maintained was such as cannot be heard except as the result of much individual study and an unlimited amount of practice together. The audience accepted this work at its face value and expressed its appreciation in no uncertain terms. The brilliance and oddity of the Grieg Opus was sensed to the full, the suave character of the Gade was allowed full play and the brilliance of the Schuett number was powerfully disclosed and was received with a like enthusiasm.

ANNA M. FARDAHL IN RECITAL

Miss Fardahl of Minneapolis gave a program in Kimball Hall in Chicago recently, when she not only played a list of good piano pieces but was heard also in a reading, the splendid "Appreciation of the Organ" by Washington Irving, and in two songs, which were given with full orchestra accompaniment.

CLARENCE EDDY

May be engaged for the Opening of New Organs and for Organ Recitals
During the Season of 1913-1914.
Address: 510 Oakwood Blvd., Chicago.

These songs were "A Perfect Day," by Carrie Jacobs-Bond, and "Solveig's Lied," by Grieg, both of which lent themselves admirably to orchestral background.

The orchestra was directed by A. Alfred Holmes and appeared to much advantage in the overture to "Raymond" (Thomas), and another (unprogramed number), both of which were enthusiastically approved by the audience.

ANNA M. FARDAHL

Miss Fardahl studied as a child at the Northwestern Conservatory in Minneapolis, after which she came to Chicago and earned a teachers' certificate at the Mendelssohn Conservatory under the instruction of Miss Carrie Scott.

She later spent a season in Europe studying with Scharwenka (who gave her a personal letter, stating that she had been a very faithful student) and later with Alberto Jonas.

Returning to America in the early spring Miss Fardahl resumed lessons with Miss Scott at the Mendelssohn Conservatory, and this year was awarded a certificate of post-graduation.

Besides studying with Miss Scott, Miss Fardahl has been a pupil in organ with Mr. Holmes and in voice with Joel Mossberg.

The Kimball Hall program read as follows:

PART I.

A La Tirolienne ..... Raff
Fur Elise ..... Beethoven
Prairie Rose No. 1, Op. 53 ..... Xaver Scharwenka
The Lark's Song ..... Tschaikowsky
Impromptu, Op. 90, No. 2 ..... Schubert
Reading, Organ Music ..... Irving
Rustle of Spring ..... Sinding
Valse Op. 64, No. 2 ..... Chopin
Butterfly ..... Grieg
Hungarian Rhapsodie, No. 13 ..... Liszt

PART II.

With Full Orchestra

Overture to Raymond ..... Thomas
First Part of Concert Stuck in C Minor ..... Chaminade
A Perfect Day ..... Carrie Jacobs-Bond
Selection by orchestra.
Solveig's Lied ..... Grieg
Concerto No. 2, Op. 22 (last movement) ..... Saint-Saens Allegro Scherzando, Presto

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The Saturday concerts of the American Conservatory have been extremely interesting during the month and that of last Saturday was particularly good inasmuch as it introduced two young pupils whose concert work is exceptional in every sense.

Miss Marie Kryl is a pianist whose advancement is hard to reconcile with her years, for being only fifteen she yet plays like twenty-five, and her repertoire is of an amazing caliber also.

Her ability to shade her work and also to infuse it with great style is remarkable, and the depth and body of her tone are almost unbelievably great.

She played Seven "Preludes" of Chopin, three of the immensely difficult "Etudes" (Paganini-Liszt) and a movement from the Tschaikowsky "Concerto," all with the very greatest of technical display and refinement in the manner of presentment.

Miss Ray played first two movements from the Lalo "Symphonie Espagnol" and aroused a very storm of applause by the musical tone of the slow movement and for the absolute security with which she threaded the intricacies of the "Rondo" and in a group of smaller pieces she demonstrated also the possession of sure, musical tone and much tastefulness of interpretation.

Mr. Heniot Levy supplied the second piano part for Miss Kryl's "Concerto" and Herbert Butler was accompanist for Miss Ray. C. E. W.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

The summer night concert of Monday was one of the most delightful ever given in the long series promoted by the Chicago University, and Mr. Robert Stevens is to be congratulated on the wise choice of artists.

The organ at the university is an unmanageable creature and as often as not it refuses to comply with the more intimate intentions of its manipulator, but on Monday evening it displayed a completely "tamed" disposition and allowed Miss Tina Mae Haines almost full play for her technic and her artistry. One says "almost," for with this organ it never is "absolute," and the tone is invariably somewhat loggy in reaching the audience, and a complete amalgamation of the different parts of the organ is almost impossible.

Miss Haines, however, used the instrument to the best possible advantage, and her choice of program was both indicative of the best in the organ repertoire and also of a pleasing quality which fitted admirably into the time and place.

Dubois' "Hosanna" is always a brilliant opening number, while the "Andante" from a Bach sonata and the "Festival Hymn" by Bartlett could not be improved upon as media for the further riveting the attention of an audience, and in these, as also in the "Chorale and Fugue" from the Guilmant "Fifth Sonata," with which the program closed, Miss Haines displayed solidity of musicianship and absolute mastery of her instrument.

It was in the smaller numbers contained in the program, however, that she shone most resplendant and which the audience accepted most joyfully as suitable for current needs.

The Karg-Elert "Moonlight" is typically French. It is weird, almost uncanny, in effect, and held on Monday intense interest for the audience. "Pan's Flute," as arranged by Miss Haines herself for organ, proved to be a charming bit. The "Romance" by Bonnet was beautiful as to content and most suave in presentment, and the "Song of Spring" by the same writer, if a little vague in its intentions, was yet given with much of spirit by the player.

The old "Offertoire in G" by Batiste was used here as an encore and proved to be as popular as it is melodious.

Lemare's "Marche Heroique" is not worth playing, in the opinion of this writer. It is bombastic and to some ears it may sound effective, but it so lacks in rhythmic spontaneity and has so little of melodic charm as to carry but little interest. The "Song of Happiness," however, is quite a different story, and while it is a sort of introspective "happiness" that is typified, and there is no brilliance whatever in the composition, it yet is novel, beautiful and extremely effective. It was played by Miss Haines with unusual charm.

She further displayed her musicianship by affording a splendid organ accompaniment for one of the songs of Miss Nazor and playing as beautifully as the very poor piano would allow those songs which required the piano accompaniment.

Miss Naomi Nazor has certainly cause for congratulation in that she has so swiftly come to the front in matters musical in Chicago. A year ago her name was unknown and today many hundreds count her as one of the most charming of local sopranos.

This is not without good and sufficient reason, for she has delightful presence and personality and her voice is of unusual power, range and quality.

The "Ave Maria" from the Bruch "Cross of Fire" was sung with a very magnificent touch and telling effect.

A Chanson by Parellii and two Lieder by Grieg and Hammond proved her the possessor of much linguistic ability and were also charmingly delivered songs, while her English group and her two encores proved her to have unusual clarity of English text presentment and also showed that her interpretative ability is wide and varied.

Saar's "Little Gray Dove" has never been sung more appealingly. Loud's "In My Garden" was well done, and Mrs. Bond's "God Remembers When the World Forgets" was charming in its simplicity and purity. Speak's "Morning" was of scintillant brilliancy, and the two encores were excellently delivered, one of them being the cunning "Shadow March" by Del Riego.

The program of next Monday evening will be given by the Imperial Quartet and includes solos by Mr. Julian Worthington and Mr. Robert Wood. C. E. W.

MRS. MAC BURNEY IN HARRIET WARE'S SONGS

The current Monday evening recital at the MacBurney studios was devoted to the compositions of Harriet Ware. When a recital of these songs was given last winter with Miss Ware in person to play the piano, the lady was grieved at a criticism which placed some of her efforts in the Early Victorian class. In a printed interview which Mr. Lester prefaced the recital by reading, she announced herself as among those separatists who regard melody as the vital element of a song, as contrasted with the studies in harmonics of very modern music. By which comment she directly places herself in the class where the offending reviewer placed her.

The songs are of unequal merit. Mr. Lester quite aptly expressed the fact when he said Miss Ware had not yet found herself. Her earlier songs, like the "Rose Morals," have more sincerity than the more labored maturer ones. They are well written but are seldom fully convincing.

Mrs. MacBurney brought to her imposed task refreshing qualities of intelligence, earnestness and thoughtfulness which supplemented her voice of good round timbre and purity of intonation; and her diction in the main was excellent. As could not fail to be the case where the work was in a way laid out—the charm which goes with more spontaneous choice was not always in evidence. Everything was well done, but with two exceptions the element of abandon was missing. The opinion is hazarded that the "Mammy" song is a repertoire number, and such may be the case with the "Joy of the Morning." Mrs. MacBurney did these with engaging temperament and made them stand out as something very choice.

Mr. Lester at the piano was in tiptop form, giving the elaborate accompaniments with splendid dash and fervor. Announcements for six weeks ahead indicate that, like Tennyson's "Brook," the school work goes right ahead despite the approaching dog days. ALBERT COTSWORTH.

EMIL LIEBLING NOTES

Mr. Liebling has some very interesting pupils in his Summer Normal Institute, among whom may be especially mentioned Mr. Paul S. Chance, who is undoubtedly the leading musician of London, Ohio, where he is the organist and director of music in the First Presbyterian Church; the programs he is able to show of his work being of remarkable caliber.

He recently gave an organ recital in the church, assisted by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson Wilson, when the following program was presented:

"Jubilate Deo" ..... Silver
Harmonies Du Soir ..... Karg-Elert
The Answer ..... Wolstenholme
Aria from "The Messiah"—"He Shall Feed His Flock" ..... Handel

Intermezzo and Fugue from the Sonata in E flat ..... Rheinberger
The Cry of Rachel ..... Salter
Come Into the Garden, Love ..... Salter
Two Folk Songs ..... Chadwick
The Danza ..... Chadwick
Norwegian Love Song ..... Clough-Leighter
Largo from the New World Symphony ..... Dvorak
Group of Scotch Songs
Grand Choeur ..... Guilmant

Another pupil whose work is of much merit is Miss Dora Lemkowitz, who is organist of the Temple at Natchez, Miss., and teacher of piano in the Stanton College at that place.

Following is a program of an organ recital given by this young musician in April at Natchez:

Entre du Cortege ..... Dubois
Benediction Nuptiale ..... Dubois
Miss Lemkowitz
Duet—The Fishermen ..... Cabussi
Mrs. Wood and Mr. Kelly
At Twilight ..... Stebbins
Evensong ..... Johnston
Miss Lemkowitz
Here Below ..... White
My Ships That Went a-Sailing ..... Lohr
Mr. Kelly

Variations on an American Air ..... Flagler
Miss Lemkowitz
There's No Spring But You ..... Lehman
Where Blossoms Grow ..... Sans Souci
A Perfect Day ..... Jacobs-Bond
Mrs. Wood
Offertorie de Ste. Cecile No. 2 ..... Batiste
Miss Lemkowitz

Frank Earl Churchill of Salem, Ore., one of the best known teachers in that city, is also with Mr. Liebling this summer, and also Miss Dora Helen L. Kirschstein, who was the winner of the Liebling gold medal at the College of St. Teresa at Winona, Minn., last spring, and who played there the following program of piano music:

Vienna Carnival Scenes, Op. 26 ..... Schumann
Allegro
Romance Poetique ..... Liebling
California Suite, Op. 57 ..... Friml
Roubideaux Vista
Festival of Roses
Miss Kirschstein
Songs—

AT RAVINIA

There were people in plenty to enjoy the programs prepared by Mr. Stock for last Saturday. The afternoon included the "Henry Eighth" dances of Edward German, "Feramors" ballet music of Rubinstein, Auber's "Masinello" overture, Meyerbeer's very palpable "Torchlight Dance," and, by way of encores, the Godard "Adagio Pathetique," Herbert's "Yesterthoughts" and Massenet's "Under the Trees." The evening list included the two middle movements of the Tschaikowsky "Pathetic Symphony," Thomas' "Mignon" overture, Glazonouw's overture "Solenelle," two solos by H. Weisbach, the concertmeister of the orchestra, and by way of encore a capital arrangement for orchestra of the Kreisler "Liebesfreud." There was no way of ascertaining the name of the adapter, but there were so many earmarks of Frederick Stock in the orchestration, that if he didn't do it, an imitator was responsible. The band played delightfully and with a sense of abandon and freedom which gave the music a sort of friendly intimacy. It is not such exacting work as the concert hall demands, and it is quite possible that it affords even greater pleasure to more people than the winter effort.

The dances of Ruth St. Denis were more than interesting. There was a feeling of their separation from our mode of thought and diversions which gave them a sort of eerie quality and consequent rascination. She was applauded to the echo.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

The program of Miss Electa Austin, pianist, and Charles E. Lutton, baritone, as printed in the last issue of Music News and given at Fisk Hall in Evanston on last Friday evening, as an "Alumni Recital" to the students of the American Institute of Normal Methods, was a splendid success.

Miss Austin is a sincerely direct and a very musically gifted pianist and played all her numbers with individual charm and a total of much impressiveness, while Mr. Lutton, long considered one of the most pleasing of Evanston singers, at this time showed an unusually well chosen program, presented with both virtuosity and remarkably clear insight into dramatic and sentimental meanings.

MILON R. HARRIS

Milon R. Harris closes his summer term August 1, having had the largest list of teachers and singers doing special work that he has had in five years. He has also registered many new students from the states for the beginning of the year, September 10. He will spend about ten days in Canada, returning to Indiana for three weeks' institutes, which he conducts each year.

Nichols.—John W. Nichols, the tenor, has been having great success at the Chautauqua Assembly, Chautauqua, N. Y., this summer, in a number of concerts for which he has been engaged. Last week he sang Sullivan's "Golden Legend," and this week he sang the tenor parts in "The Messiah," an oratorio which is particularly suitable to his voice and with which he is having remarkable success. Next week Mr. Nichols will take the part of Manrico in Verdi's "Ill Trovatore," which will end a very busy month of more than a dozen concerts, and which has already established him as a general favorite with the Chautauqua audiences.

The Elderly Person

The Elderly Person didn't look at the paper after the train had wormed its way out of the town. Because of the heat the window was wide open and a beneficent air current caused the cinders to blow the other way. Also some guardian of all selfishness gave each passenger an entire seat to him or herself. Therefore the Elderly Person could block the window space and, resting his elbows on the sill, make a cup of his hands and support his head. And he did for an hour or more as he drank in the beauty with his eyes and odor with his nostrils, of the clover fields in the last stages of their glory. This season will be remembered for a long period as a great clover year. Old-timers a-plenty are ready to stake their reputations on the assertion that there has never before been one quite like it. The Elderly Person glories in the statement, and tosses his small un-farmery stone upon what may be either the cairn of dead reputations, or a monument of veracity.

The clover is everywhere. Every tiny seed whiffed here and there by the industrious missionary winds found itself in just the right sort of a haven from any destroying influence. Each one huddled itself in its warm corner and did no visiting throughout the winter. Then when the notice came to bring fruition to pass, the sunshine was generous and just glowing enough, and the rains came often and not too soaking. Then one June day there sprang into sight the myriads of diminutive heads of bloom crowding and creeping in every conceivable place where a seed could find lodgment, protection and roothold. It would seem as if no single seed had failed to mature, and no plant wanted for nutrition.

The old-fashioned white clover with its greenish white flower was most abundant, because its supporting roots can take more chances than the more succulent red clover, as the farmers have always called it. It really isn't red, in the strict sense of the word, but a person unreliable as to shades of color had best say nothing on that score. Then there is the pink and white Alsack clover, named after the man who found that he could cross the two other plants and produce a hybrid which has much of the large vigor of the old red, and the smaller heads and stems of the old white. But it is still the dear familiar greenish white which carries the fragrance most fully, however appetizing for feed and flushing with delicate shades the new candidate may be. In a field where all three riot and play for a hearing the effect is lovely beyond words. And the air is saturated with perfume.

But it is not in the fields alone that the clover has been making itself felt and seen. In the fence corners it was crowding the sunflowers for space. It runs up to the edges of lily ponds and sends heavy heads over to look at themselves in the water. It crowded the bindweed alongside the railroad track for quarters. A tangle of the upturned white cups of the bindweed amid the clover caps is fascinating. It comrades with the wide, flat leaves of the rosinweed and the broad fans wave good-naturedly when the tufts of color are tossed about with vagrant winds. A field of the squatter wild mustard, dashing and brilliant, held out against inroads and presented a solid square of its bold gold, but it was bordered with the blending pinks and reds and greens as neatly as are the edges of a rug. Another field where tall grasses headed full of seed floated and soared above the white flowers, gave to the vision the effect of a filmy veil of chiffon over the contrasting color. When into the strongholds of the clover the black-eyed susans crowded their way and shot up their stiff stems with the flat yellow and black tops, there was a real struggle for supremacy. The fight had been long and severe, as one could see, as the train turned in and out among farms and villages. In some places the doughty susan with true suffragette spirit had done wonders, and the long patches of Spanish showiness flaunted and tossed their fans with proprietary airs. But for the most part susan was only a part of the show. A patch of shaded and so belated wild roses in a tangle of the clover was an unforgettable influence. The lacelike parsnip and carrot blooms swayed in the tents of color. And at times the deep blue of the spiderwort protested at an invasion of its own particular territory. This plant doesn't grow willingly on low flat land, and seems to have studied out its effects carefully and chosen points where it can bend and float invitingly and not reveal too much of its elongated stem. So on the rocky, low hillsides it wore a hurt look at the crowding, clambering clover, ambushing and assailing it with all the determination of an army of youthful soldiers. But the grieved look did no good. It was the clover's year and it proposed to make the most of its big chance.

In low, swampy places where there were little islands of arid soil, it found foothold and sent out all sorts of tentative runners to investigate future openings. It looked back over its shoulder all the time to be sure it was not going too far from home and supplies. And when it found new lodgement and sustenance it paused and preened itself and then sent out tiny sentinel banners of bloom to signal to other adventurers that there was room for them.

But when the time-tried and veteran yarrow was encountered then was there a battle royal indeed. The pastures and uplands have ever been the stronghold of this sturdy perennial with its straight stiff stalk and fernlike leaves and the flat top of white flowers. Animals of all kinds carefully avoid it, except when their instinct tells them they are out of order, inside. Housewives used to use it on the youngsters when there were disorders among their flocks. Yarrow tea made one of the most offensive sorts of the concoctions the little folks of former generations had to take; and the doses were so large that there were seas of tears when the brew was put before the victim. Now the plant seems to be untouched and left out of service, and so it cheerfully flirts its white and green lace handkerchief on all the barren hillsides, blooming early and late and seemingly content to be just a part of the landscape. Into much of its pre-empted territory the restless, roistering clover has sent its cohorts. The only way in which the yarrow could assert itself was to rear its heads the higher and flaunt its stalks the more vigorously. The clover seemed to enjoy the situation and massed itself in battalions and braced some of its healthier tufts to thus climb higher for the light and air and so creep the nearer the top of the rival plant. In a plot where some occurrences like this were taking place the wind blew briskly. Everywhere was the red and white and pink and green of the busy clover. Nodding and swaying out of its reach were the full tops of the yarrow. A lot of black-eyed susans were laughing in the midst of the acreage, catching and reflecting the yellow light of the sunshine. Some wild roses were in the edges, a little afraid of the excessive animation. Dancing and playing with that idleness which is their own particular inheritance, were countless yellow and white butterflies, newly born and as carefree as all the generations of their kind were who preceded them. The Elderly Person had to utter some exclamations of pleasure, and turned around and urged the passing conductor to pull that strap and stop the train and let us look long on something so rare. He did this with his most positive Siegel-Cooper manner, but the autocrat only smiled good-naturedly and shook his head.

In the patches of lawn about the stations the clover looked at you with tiny unwinking eyes saying that the more the grass was cut the easier it was to furnish new blossoms. Under the trees in the farmhouse yards and in the orchards it was snugly ensconced. It flirted with the tasseling heads of the maturing oats and pulled at the beards of the wheat and rye like roguish children teasing grandfather. It raised saucy heads at the sober beet-tops, and made eyes at the new cabbages, now quite sedate in the rows of propriety which obtain under a watchful mother's authority. And its tricks with the corn were uncounted, because the corn was in the thick of all the goings-on.

But one day saw the white tufts growing brown, and almost before one knew it, although there had been nearly a month of the revel of color and perfume, the jaunty heads were laid low in long windrows. And when the night came on there were shocks of the new-mown hay dotting the fields. Above each one was a square of white cloth stretched by a string tied to each corner and fastened to stakes driven into the ground. As the darkness closed down, the clover children had had their nightcaps put on and gone to bed and to sleep. They could snuggle close and talk about it, but the fun was over.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

Just where the concert will be given has not yet been decided upon, but it is planned to have musicians of national reputation render the program. The large Presbyterian Church in Sewickley, where Nevin was organist in his earlier years, has been suggested as an appropriate scene. A magnificent new organ has been recently installed, which would lend splendid aid to vocal and orchestral features. The church itself, which had great sentimental value in Nevin's life, seats about 1,000. The Carnegie Music Hall, in Pittsburgh is also under consideration.

No definite design for the monument has been adopted but its general character will be in keeping with the fame of the composer.

Twelfth concert, March 27, Emma Loeffler soprano.

ALLIANCE, OHIO

The faculty of Mount Union Scio College Conservatory, Alliance, Ohio, Herbert Edmund Hutchinson, director, gave a most interesting recital before the students of the summer school July 15. Mr. Hutchinson was in fine form and gave most interesting interpretations of the Schubert numbers. In the aria from "Aida," he reached dramatic heights, his voice ringing out as a true heroic tenor, and winning an enthusiastic encore.

Mr. Murrison was in excellent voice, delivering his big aria with breadth and dignity, and giving adequate interpretation to the more modern numbers. His oral program notes are always most interesting.

The pianists, Mrs. Murrison and Miss Stahl were well received. Their accompaniments were also well done.

The program follows:

La Campanella ..... Liszt
Miss Ruth Louise Stahl, pianist
Wandering Mine / Hark! Hark! the Lark ..... Schubert
Herbert Hutchinson, tenor
Mighty Lord and King ..... Bach
Harry Murrison, basso cantante
Twelfth Rhapsodie ..... Liszt
Mrs. Harry Murrison, pianist
Celestial Aida, aria from "Aida" ..... Verdi
Herbert Hutchinson, tenor
Banjo Song ..... Homer
Invictus ..... Huhn
Spirit Flower ..... Campbell-Tipton
Pirate Song ..... Gilbert
Harry Murrison, basso cantante

LOS ANGELES

The Gamut Club made its monthly banquet on July 3 a patriotic event in celebration of the nation's birthday. President F. W. Blanchard and his 200 guests and their distinguished visitors, enjoyed a program of much interest. Mrs. Ellen Beach Yaw sang a "Lark Song," Miss Margaret McKee was the "Mocking Bird" artist, in an exquisite whistling accomplishment, William Conrad Mills, tenor soloist from Washington, D. C., sang to the great delight of the audience. Others who participated were Mme. Del Mare, lyric soprano of Berne, Switzerland. Mme. Carolyn von Grison, lyric soprano of Sydney, Australia; our own Miss Olga Steeb, pianist; Miss Bertha Fish, violinist; Miss Emma Thursby of New York was also a guest of the club. Patriotic songs were sung and Professor J. A. Forshay gave the "Star Spangled Banner" in excellent voice and style. Seward A. Simons spoke with eloquence on "Independence Day."

The Pacific Coast Sangerbund, of 250 members, had their annual meeting here, of three days, and gave several excellent programs of German compositions. They hope to have a chorus of 1,000 voices for their next biennial meeting, 1915, at San Francisco. Professor F. Dietz was the musical director. Seven choral clubs were in attendance under their respective leaders and were heard in the programs. Their singing was marked by great enthusiasm and much devotion to the spirit of song.

The Verdi School with Signor Pietro Buzzi, teacher, presented in excellent style a fine program by his aspiring pupils, a score or more being represented, many of whom have voices of much promise. The annual is looked upon as an event of special interest.

The State Music Teachers' Association is in session in San Francisco and Los Angeles artists have been received with high praise.

Miss Frieda Peycke in her songs and pianologues, Mr. Alfred A. Butler, in an organ recital, Mr. Charles Farwell Edson on a talk on "Business in Music," etc.

The Lyric Club of 100 ladies have organized for the coming season with Mrs. Henry P. Flint as president. Mr. Poulin is re-engaged as director.

The great Christian Endeavor convention is now in full blast with audiences of from 10,000 to 15,000 people.

The enormous tent has proven to be most superb, the acoustics equalizing the Mormon Tabernacle. The opening concert on Monday night, with a chorus of 1,000 voices and great soloists was a charming success. About 9,000 were in attendance on an admission fee. William H. Meads' Orchestra, and grand pianos supplied the instrumental support.

The chorus was under the local director, Mr. L. F. Peckham, who displayed re-

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

BY

SIDNEY SILBER

(Director Pianoforte Department, the University School of Music, Lincoln, Nebraska)

The way of technic is from the brain to the fingers—not the reverse. Fingers act intelligently only under orders from "headquarters."

Without art—no life; without life—no art.

Never trust to luck in public piano playing, for, in the majority of cases, you will only have bad luck.

Tell me what kind of piano music you try to interpret, and I will tell you what kind of a pianist you are.

Beware of playing the piano in the manner of the boy who failed to find the forest "because the trees were in the way." Most pianists fail to make music, because the notes are in the way.

Nobility and profundity of character are best expressed in music.

Ideas and ideals are the "sine qua non" of all artists.

Don't make the same mistake twice; there are so many others awaiting your "disposition."

If you wish to create agitation in your listeners "keep cool" yourself—but do not play coldly—there's a difference.

Charm and style in piano playing are created by rhythmic and dynamic variety.

In piano playing silence is frequently most eloquent. Moral: give your listeners a rest once in a while.

There are no immutable or absolute laws of tonal charm. Beauty is a matter of personal experience, attitude and taste.

Never aspire to become an imitator of even the greatest. Be YOURSELF, even if your productions as an imitator are relatively better.

Much "respectable" piano playing, like many respectable persons, is only tedious. Piano playing should at least be interesting.

Accuracy belongs under the heading of musical decency; but decency is expected in every one. It is no distinction to be decent, even in music.

The inter-communication of kindred artistically-inclined souls is one of life's sublimest experiences.

markable ability in handling the large body of singers, made up from the choirs, clubs, and incidental singers comprising the Endeavor chorus. They sang Gounod's "Send Out Thy Light," Rossini's "Inflammatus," Haven's "Homeland" (all a cappella), and Handel's "Hallelujah," in excellent clearness, attack and sureness, to the delight of all present.

Mr. Abraham Miller sang "If With All Your Hearts," from "Elijah," in good style and voice. Mr. George H. Bemus, gave the recitative, "Thus Saith the Lord," and aria, "Who May Abide," from "The Messiah," with telling effect. Miss Grace James, soprano, gave Buck's "My Redeemer and My Lord."

The solo and obligato to "Inflammatus," were most effectively rendered by Mrs. Robert A. Smith, a popular church singer in our city.

The thousands of delegates will have the pleasure of hearing the program Friday evening this week. The convention promises to exceed all others in attendance. Much singing of a lighter order will enliven the sessions in the tent, and many of the larger churches down town.

Manager L. E. Behymer has announced a wonderful array of talent for the coming season in the Philharmonic courses and special concerts of the season. Mme Schumann-Heink, Miss Geraldine Farrar, Putnam Griswold (basso), Paderewski, Fritz Kreisler, Jean Gerardy ('cellist), Mme. Frances Alda with LaForge as pianist, Charles W. Clark, baritone; Josef Hofmann, pianist; John McCormack, tenor; Mischa Elman, violinist; Melba-Kubelik Co., Flonzaley Quartet, and many others of great excellence. With the above we ought to grow in musical taste and appreciation. Then our Symphony Orchestra and choral organizations of best grade, all will present the best possible programs.

S. W. MOUNTZ.

DENVER

The fourth concert of the summer Symphony concerts, Horace E. Tureman, director, was heard at Elitch's Gardens the afternoon of June 11.

These gardens are dear to the heart of Denver people, for there is a quiet and beauty about them that is pronounced; a loneliness of flowers and sense of peace that makes us think of this spot as "our" gardens.

The opening number of the program was Beethoven's Funeral March from Symphony "Eroica." This was in memory of Miss Florence Taussig, who passed to the Great Beyond July 4. Miss Taussig was to have been the soloist at this concert. She was a pianist of such splendid ability, of such breadth of musicianly understanding, that in her going, Denver has lost a pillar in its temple of music.

Mme. Arthur Nikoloric was soloist. We are glad to say she is an American, for her work was much liked.

Her choice of selection was Schumann's Concerto in A Minor. In the second and third movements, which lead directly from one to the other, the pianist did beautiful, clean-cut work. The whole concerto was well phrased, well interpreted. The orchestra was dependable and followed well Mr. Tureman's leading. Following this number the sincerity of applause must have been most gratifying to soloist and director.

Something that the audience always looks forward to and is much pleased with are the compositions for strings; there were two, which were most pleasing, (a) "Forget-Me-Not," and (b) "Sunset," both by Herbert.

In the three excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz, the "Rakoczy March," with its brilliant instrumentation was most effective.

The soloist the same afternoon at Lakeside, Cavallo's Symphony Orchestra, was the brilliant young pianist, Miss Mamie Kolinsky. She will, no doubt, be a fine success in a splendid career mapped out for her.

THE SEARCH CONCERT-RECITAL, OXFORD, OHIO

Frederick Preston Search, violoncellist, assisted by Miss Ada Zeller, accompanist, and Miss Lorena Zeller, mezzo-soprano, gave a most delightful concert-recital at the State University Summer School, Oxford, Ohio, on the evening of July 5. Miss Ada Zeller is the finest piano accompanist of Cincinnati, and her noble support of the talented 'cellist was a glorious additional treat to the audience of over 500 music lovers. Miss Lorena Zeller is a charming singer, heard in Oxford for the first time, and her rich numbers more than pleased her hearers. Critics who have heard Frederick Preston Search elsewhere, said they never heard the great soloist to such advantage. Indeed, it was remarked that 'cellist, singer and pianist made an ideal trio for concert recital work.

Among the other charming numbers of the evening were three of Frederick Preston Search's new compositions: a most delightful song "Kussen will ich, ich will kussen" (from his Life Story Cycle), a very beautiful "Wiegenlied," and his fascinating "Butterfly Waltz."

QUO VADIS AT OAK PARK

The De Luxe season of motion pictures at the Warrington theater will end on Saturday night, August 2, and Manager Gatts has arranged to present in the Warrington theater during the week of August 4, the famous photo-play "Quo Vadis," which has just completed a ten weeks' engagement at McVicker's Theater, Chicago.

"Quo Vadis" is the stupendous Kleinc-Cines photo-drama in three acts. The play requires eight reels of 1,000 feet each, with over 250 scenes requiring two hours and fifteen minutes to project. A few of the external features of the picture are over forty lions that are used in the production. Over 3,500 people posed for the picture.

But one performance is given each evening, commencing at 8:30 p. m. with a daily matinee during the week starting at 2:30 p. m.

Aborn.—Mr. Milton Aborn has announced that he has practically secured the Russian Opera Company, now at Covent Garden in London for a season of opera at the Century Theater in New York next spring, this engagement to follow immediately after the regular season of the Century Company.

Hopkins.—Miss Jessie Lynde Hopkins is spending this month at the Whitney homestead at Nahant, Mass.

DRESDEN

The royal opera closed its representations with a brilliant performance of the "Meistersinger" on July 6 to open again middle of August. So far the dead season has set in now, everybody hurrying away to look for rest and recreation out of the city to green fields, woods or the seashores.

The last pupils' concert was given by Mr. Franz H. Armbruster, one of our best vocal pedagogues, who by this performance gained great praise in the dailies and sincere recognition by his numerous hearers. The big Casino hall was completely filled. Among his most advanced and prominent pupils should be mentioned Fraulein Irene Karman, a Hungarian, whose inborn musical gifts were exquisitely brought into evidence by the rendition of selections from Meyerbeer (the prophet aria, (Ah, mon fils) and the "Lied der Walkyre" by Eyken. Her beautiful alto, her technical ability (already far advanced), her genuine musical temperament and fire, point distinctly to the stage. Great success was also achieved by Mr. Oswald A. Olsen of Oregon, a prominent basso, whose interpretation of a Loewe song and an aria from the "Magic Flute" (Isis and Osiris), count among the best numbers on the program. Herr Ernst Aye further gave great satisfaction, the same should be said of Frau Thieme's musicianly interpretation of some Strauss and Brahms songs. (Nacht gang and Zigeuner lieder). She will be able to appear in public with success. Frln. Grete Stanck, also a Hungarian, gave great pleasure by her Wagner selections. Herr Stamat gives promise in future. Frau Berta Roth distinguished herself in songs by Wolf, Schubert, Brahms. Miss Alice Fisher's sweet voice and fine interpretation won her much favor. Miss McGeorge succeeded beautifully with a Weber aria, Baronesse o'Byrn Frl. Polscher, Siegmeyer, Pfaff a. o. should be mentioned as having done their teacher immense credit. Of course these opinions are given to encourage pupils, who have all of them not finished their studies, but who have worked hard with more or less success during the season. Herr Professor Armbruster may look back with sincere satisfaction on his successful work as a pedagogue.

In a soiree given by the organist of the Scotch Church, we heard a young promising singer, Frl. Kaehler (selections by Rossini) who bids fair to become a fine vocalist.

On another occasion Miss Rosetta Wiener was heard in selections for two pianos (second piano Frln von Ziegler). Miss Wienter, I understand, has taught the piano for some years past in America. She made an excellent impression. Frln. Natalie von Ziegler surprised her hearers by giving proofs of her compository talent, small pianoforte pieces which were very well done.

Miss Glade tried her forces as a pianist in an invitation concert, which she, according to a notice in the papers, arranged to give herself routine in concert work for which she is preparing.

A. INGMAN.

20 Franklinstrasse, July 8, 1913.

SOFIA STEPHALI

Some recent comment is as follows:

Mme. Sofia Stephali gave two concert-lectures in Association Hall, yesterday, in the afternoon and night. The programs were different from that given the first night, and the patrons of all three were well entertained with a varied number of songs.

"Music and Childhood" was the subject in the afternoon, and "Music and Life" at night. In song recital Mme. Stephali is charming. Without the aid of lectures she can educate and entertain. She will be remembered by many through her beautiful voice. —Worcester (Mass.) Daily Telegram.

At the close of her talk Mme. Stephali was heard in several beautiful songs which she interpreted with great charm. She has a lovely mezzo-soprano voice, and one that shows the result of much training. Her numbers met with hearty applause.—Bridgeport (Conn.) Post.

Those who gathered at the Parish House Tuesday to hear Madame Stephali and Miss Lathrop in the final lecture, song and piano recital of their present engagement were privileged to listen to a rare musical treat, not so much from the standpoint of the classical as for the charming and harmonic manner in which the classical was blended with the more common and readily understood themes.

Madame Stephali's lecture on "Music and Life" delivered in her charming and unassuming manner as on the previous occasion of her appearance in this city at once brought her audience and herself into perfect harmony and made one feel immediately the effect of her charming personality.

Considering music and its connection with life, Stephali led her audience from early childhood through mature life, to the cathedral at vesper time, while the great organ pealed forth its strains and the great choir of many voices in perfect harmony sang the final Te Deum and to the final scene at the open grave, where the friends and relatives of the departed in broken voice chorused their last farewell, "Abide with Me."

And in every instance one felt that he or she was walking, at least in spirit through the scenes which Madame Stephali so ably depicted.

Concord has been privileged to hear a singer of international fame, who has appeared in many of the larger cities of Europe and been praised and honored by eminent critics of many countries, more competent to judge of her ability than the humble writer of this article and Concord people will long cherish the memory of an evening or two happily spent in her company.—Concord (N. H.) Evening Monitor. (Advertisement.)

CECIL FANNING

Some further comment of the London press on the work of Cecil Fanning, American baritone, reads as follows:

Sunday Times, London, England, April 20, 1913.—At his second recital at Bechstein Hall Tuesday afternoon, Mr. Cecil Fanning, the American baritone, gave further evidence of the graces of his voice and style. Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh" and Schumann's "Der Nussbaum" were sung with just the right feeling, and delicate expression, and Mr. Fanning's command of dramatic intensity was shown in his fine rendering of Loewe's "Sir Oluf" and Moussorgsky's "Siege of Kazan."

Musical Standard, London, England, April 19, 1913.—This young and accomplished singer gave a fine display of his powers, which combine in happy fashion, beauty of tone, and dramatic intensity. He appears to have studied the art of interpretation to good purpose, and exemplified it in Loewe's "Edward," and Schubert's "Erlkonig," both of which require a high degree of imaginative force to compel the attention of a general audience. In those numbers, relying on freshness and sincerity of style, nothing better could have been desired than Mr. Cecil Fanning's rendering. Special mention must be made of "Wohin," and the lovely song, "Lass O Welt," given as an encore. The singer's command of language and purity of diction merit great praise. The able accompaniments of Mr. H. B. Turpin cannot be passed over, and vocalists should always remember how much their success depends upon the presiding genius at the piano.

The Star, London, England, April 10, 1913.—Mr. Cecil Fanning, the American baritone, who gave a concert at Bechstein Hall on Tuesday last, and sings again next Tuesday, is gifted with a voice of exceptionally sympathetic quality. He is a very polished singer, and understands the artistic use of vocal color quite exceptionally well. His program was well chosen. Mr. H. B. Turpin accompanied with artistic zeal.

Dulwick Post, London, England, April 12, 1913.—Mr. Cecil Fanning, the young American baritone, who has already won golden opinions abroad, appeared at Bechstein Hall on the 8th inst., when he further enhanced the high esteem in which he is already held. Electing to be heard in a program covering many shades of poetic feeling and poignant expression, he emerged very successfully from the trying ordeal, and showed himself the possessor, not only of a highly-trained and beautifully flexible voice, but also of a masterly style that at once proclaimed him a chaste and accomplished artist. Mr. Fanning is a singer of rare temperamental power, and gifted with that refinement of feeling and emotional insight that enables him to convey to his hearers the true inwardness of his subject. Mr. Turpin proved a helpful and efficient accompanist. (Advertisement.)

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK IN CALIFORNIA

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the world's greatest contralto, has cast her lot with California. She passed through Los Angeles, Friday, en route to her new home at Grossmont, near San Diego, where she has had erected a wonderful bungalow called "The House of a Thousand Views." She has resolved to become a Californian and has on her ranch in the El Cajon Valley her son Hans and his wife and infant daughter, and her son Ferdinand is in charge of the Grossmont home, while she is accompanied by her daughter Mizza and younger son, George Washington.

Mme. Schumann-Heink will spend the summer in Southern California until her Chautauqua and summer music festival dates call her east early in August, and she will then make a flying trip to Munich for her special grand opera engagements for the last week in August and the first two weeks in September, returning in time for the Maine Festival and other engagements before opening her concert season in Los Angeles the middle of November. —Philharmonic Review, San Francisco.

Frosolono.—Sig. and Mme. Frosolono have returned from their vacation and resumed lessons at their home studio, 1227 East Forty-fourth place. Their trip included a stay at the Mackinac Islands and also a week at Lakeside Inn on the Islands of Les Chenaux, where they were guests of E. D. McBain.

SOME NEW MUSIC

REVIEWED BY S. H. LOVEWELL

The John Church Company of Cincinnati and New York has issued six numbers of organ music that should meet with the direct approval of every organist. Disregarding the reprint of the familiar Schumann Canon in B minor, and the attractive Gavotte (arr. by Guilmant) from Martini's Sonata No. 12, there remain four works of real importance. These are: "Grand Choeur Militaire" by G. H. Federlein, "Serenade in C," Demarest; "Concert Prelude in D Minor," A. Walter Kramer, and "Finale in B flat," Frederick, Maxson. The most brilliant and most acceptable of these is the number by Federlein. The work by Maxson makes a good second. There are one or two places in the counterpoint in the pedal in the Federlein number that some organists will prefer in a different reading. The Maxon number is showy without being high art; it can be used either as a recital number or as a postlude. The use of consecutive fifths add little to the musical value of the theme.

The "Prelude" by Kramer is pretentious but not great. The Serenade is inconsequential.

Judging by the quite long list of songs by Mr. William S. Johnson that have come to my notice during the last two years, this young composer is rapidly forging to the front. Recently he has published (Boston Music Co.) a superior song cycle entitled "From a Venetian Balcony," and there will be little danger of being contradicted when it is said that it belongs to his best work. There are four songs in high and low keys. The movements and moods contrast well; a languorous barcarolle, a charming lullaby with accompaniment in harplike embellishments and campanella tones, a gondola song, and mermaid minstrelsy in the magic caves beneath the sea. The final number, "Mermaids' Voices," is the finest number in the collection and fully displays the artistry and excellent musicianship of the composer. The text of this cycle is by Lady Lindsay. Other works by this composer will soon appear and are anticipated with pleasure.

The same publishers have issued a most dramatic song cycle by W. Frank-Harling called "The Divan of Hafiz" (text from the "Persian" by Richard Le Gallienne). It makes a great number for recital purposes. It is full of the joyous mood of spring. It is as a whole far above the average collection of love lyrics.

Also one of the strongest dramatic compositions for solo voice (baritone) that has recently appeared is: "If That Angel of Shiraz" (text from the "Divan of Hafiz") in musical setting by Granville Bantock. It is published by the Oliver Ditson Company. The accompaniment is very orchestral in its elaborateness. An adequate presentation of this number would require two musicians of the highest attainments. It is a small modern opera in itself.

It is a pleasure to record a Bible Song ("Seek Ye First the Kingdom of Heaven") by William Arms Fisher as a satisfactory solo for church. (Three different keys. Oliver Ditson Company.)

Since First I Met Thee
She Is Mine
Requiem
Miss Ruby Smith

Dramatic soprano solos –
The Pine Tree.....Mary Turner Salter
For You Alone.....Henry L. Geehl
Mrs. Verna H. Luther

Unfortunately only the finale number was heard by the reviewer, however, assuming that the standard of excellence throughout was equal to that of this one number, and judging from the general comment of those assembled, it may be said that the evening was a most profitable one.

Mrs. Verna Luther, a soprano from Michigan, here in attendance at the summer session of the American Institute, acquitted herself most creditably in "The Pine Tree," Mary Turner Salter, and "For You Alone," Geehl.

Mrs. Luther's is a voice undeniable beautiful, having also the range required to be a soprano of value. Special mention is due the excellence of enunciation in this case, as well as the niceity with which the phrasing was accomplished.

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MUSICAL CLUBS

Fourth Biennial Prize Competition for American Composers

In announcing the fourth competition for American composers, the committee feels that a few preliminary remarks are necessary.

This competition has now attained such prominence in the musical world; the wide interest taken in the awarding of these prizes, and the public rendition of the prize compositions, have brought the competition to such an important position that the question of standard to be maintained is a serious one for the federation, composers and judges. While the compositions that receive the awards are only the best submitted in this competition, still the world at large looks upon them as representing the best product in the various classes from our American composers. In order to meet this belief, which is in reality what we wish to attain, two things are absolutely necessary. First, that the best, most experienced writers of music among American composers should enter the competition. Second, that there be a rigid adherence to the highest standard of excellence in the bestowal of awards. Therefore, the Committee of American Music of the National Federation of Musical Clubs feels justified in stating that unless the manuscripts entered in the various classes meet the requirements of a prize composition as to excellency and superiority, and have the unanimous vote of the judges in each class, the awards will be withheld. This decision is made only to inspire our composers to greater and finer work, and to place the prize competition above question.

The National Federation of Musical Clubs announces that it will give prizes for the best compositions by American composers in four classes, as follows:

Class I. Orchestral work; symphony or symphonic poem $700

Class II. Festival Chorus for children's voices 300

Orchestral Accompaniment

Special Prize

Class III. Piano Solo given by women of Federated Clubs 200

Class IV. Brush Memorial Prize for best Sacred Quartet with solo. Organ accompaniment 100

In addition to the prizes offered by the National Federation of Musical Clubs, the following is offered to women composers, members of Federated Clubs:

Student's Prize. Best song for woman's voice, secular or sacred, with accompaniment for piano or organ, with or without obligato accompaniment $100

Prize given by Mrs. Jacob R. Custer, Chicago, Ill.

The conditions of the competition are as follows:

1. The competition is open only to composers born within the United States of America, or those born of American parentage in foreign countries.

2. All manuscripts must be in ink and clearly written and the compositions submitted must not have been published nor have received public performance.

3. The composer shall omit signature from the manuscript, labeling it with name of class in which it is entered, signing with only a private mark, and shall send with the manuscript a sealed envelope containing this mark and the composer's name and birthplace, and also stamps or amount of expense for return charges.

4. All compositions shall have titles and words, if any, in English.

5. All compositions must be submitted before or on September 1, 1914, but no composition will be received earlier than August 1, 1914.

6. Prize winners of the National Federation of Musical Clubs' competition cannot enter two successive competitions.

The special prize to women composers, members of Federated Clubs, is governed by the same conditions as the general prizes.

Prize winners in each competition are made honorary members of the National Federation of Musical Clubs.

This competition was inaugurated at the Fifth Biennial Festival of the National Federation of Musical Clubs at Memphis, Tenn., May 8-11, 1907, and the successful compositions were performed at the Sixth Biennial Festival at Grand Rapids, Mich., May 24-29, 1909; at the Seventh Biennial Festival at Philadelphia, Pa., March 27-31, 1911, and at the Eighth Biennial Festival at Chicago, Ill., April 21-26, 1913. The prize compositions of the fourth competition will be rendered at the Biennial Festival of the National Federation of Musical Clubs, to be held at Los Angeles, Cal., in 1915.

Prize winners of the competition are requested to furnish copies or orchestral parts for rendition of compositions at Biennial Festival.

The judges, three in each class, will be chosen as before, from among competent persons, prominent in musical life, in different parts of the United States.

All compositions must be sent not earlier that August 1, 1914, to Mrs. Jason Walker, Chairman of American Music Committee, 116 South Michigan avenue, Chicago.

American-born composers are cordially invited to enter this competition.

CARL FAELTEN

In the issues of Music News for the past month there have appeared the programs of the Faelten Pianoforte School, of Boston, in full detail—as given during the past season. These have created a vast amount of comment and we are glad therefore to supplement this matter with something about Mr. Carl Faelten, the director of this school, whose picture appears on the front page of this issue of Music News.

Mr. Faelten was born in Thuringia, December 21, 1846. Showing early talent for music, he was fortunate in securing competent preliminary instruction under Musikdirector Montag, in Weimer, a prominent pupil of J. N. Hummel. He possessed an ambition to become a pianist, but depending upon his own resources, he entered one of the orchestral schools in Germany. In 1868 he settled in Frankfort, where he resumed the study of pianoforte and theory under Julius Schoch, at that time the most prominent teacher in Frankfort, but after two years the German military law compelled him to serve as a soldier during the Franco-Prussian war. When his term of service expired, so successfully did he carry on his musical education, that after 1874 he appeared successfully in symphony concerts and recitals in Frankfort, Berlin, Vienna, London, and many other European cities, which soon brought him reputation among critical circles. He also devoted much time to teaching, in which he showed unusual skill.

He made frequent visits to Wiesbaden, where he became intimately acquainted with the composer, Joachim Raff, who took much interest in him and influenced his musical work. When, in 1877, Raff was called to Frankfort to organize the conservatory there, he selected Faelten as one of his teachers of pianoforte. Here Faelten's time was especially devoted to the training of teachers, and he delivered many lectures on the theoretical and practical requirements of teachers in piano playing. After Raff's sudden death he decided to come to America, and in 1882 he was engaged at the Peabody Institute in Baltimore. In 1885 he removed to Boston in response to a call from the New England Conservatory of Music, and five years later he was appointed director of that institution, which position he held until 1897.

During this time the "Fundamental Training Course," by Carl and Reinhold Faelten, which is now used extensively throughout the country, was published (1894) and practically tested for three years, at the end of which time Mr. Faelten resigned his position at the New England Conservatory and established the Faelten Pianoforte School, of which he is the able director.

Faelten is widely known as a musician and pianist. In 1899 he began a series of recitals of standard pianoforte works, and has given since that time twenty-four programs in Boston without repeating a single work. He has always given equal attention to his work as a teacher, and many of his pupils have become prominent in the musical profession. Besides the "Fundamental Training Course" he has written and edited a number of instructive works, and his broad experience in musical matters and the almost phenomenal success of his pianoforte school have gained for him a position in the foremost rank of musical educators.

The Faelten Pianoforte School is situated at 30 Huntington avenue, Boston, and though founded so late as 1897 it has long since grown to be one of the most noted institutions in the country.

This is primarily because of the splendid personality and the very great musical intelligence of Mr. Faelten and also because of the splendid faculty he has gathered about him and the unique and absolutely effective system which has been evolved in his school.

The catalog issued by this school is one of the handsomest ever seen in Music News office and gives with great fidelity the essential points of The Faelten System.

ALICE IONE CRAMER

Miss Cramer, who will leave soon for concert and Chautauqua work in Iowa, has had a busy and successful year; for, in addition to her regular position as soprano soloist in the quartet at the First Baptist Church at Evanston Sunday morning, and in the quartet at North Shore Congregational church in the evening, she has had an enthusiastic class of private pupils, has directed the chorus at Mrs. Starrett's School for Girls, has been an active member in the Amateur Musical Club, and has had many engagements at musicales, including dates in Emmetsburg and Red Oak, Iowa; Detroit, Mich., and at the homes of Mrs. Edwin H. Guerin, Mrs. J. T. Brayton, Mrs. Bertram E. Sippy, and Mrs. W. S. Bartholomew in Chicago; at concerts at West Park No. III; Bessemer and Sherman Parks, and at Men's League of Chicago Sunday Evening Club. She sang at the Starrett commencement exercises; sang in Gaul's "Holy City" Monday evening, in La Grange, and Thursday evening at summer night concert; has substituted several times in Jewish holiday services at Temple Emanuel, and at the People's Synagogue.

appeared in fifty-six consecutive appearances in the pageant of "Darkness and Light." The above costume is authentic and was rented for this occasion from the National Museum at Washington.

Mrs. Gannon revealed her histrionic ability in this work to the delight of her many admirers, as she is known all over the country as a leading oratorio and concert artist.

CINCINNATI ORCHESTRA

As soloist with the Cincinnati Orchestra, under Dr. Kunwald, Christine Miller had a very flattering success at Dayton, Ohio early in the season. This popular American contralto's work was no less attractive and no less enthusiastically received than was Dr. Kunwald and his orchestra. Press comments follow:

Miss Christine Miller was the soloist of the evening and the attractive young contralto was received with instant favor. Possessed of a voice warm and sympathetic, temperament and personal magnetism, Miss Miller has taken a very definite place in the musical life of the country and is much in the public eye. Her voice is not so big as many concert contraltos who are favorites of the day, but her renditions are artistic in the extreme. She offered "Die Lorelei" (Liszt) and aria, "O Don Fatale" from Verdi's "Don Carlos." Both were sombre, calling into play Miss Miller's dramatic possibilities, and her reception was warmly appreciative. In response to the only encore given during the evening Miss Miller sang the "Romance" from "Faust."—The Dayton Journal.

Miss Christine Miller, one of the most eminent of America's younger singers, was the soloist at this inaugural concert. Miss Miller is a contralto whose well modulated tones combined with the deeply sympathetic understanding and personal charm of the singer proclaim her at all times an artist of high attainments.—The Herald.

Miss Christine Miller was heard for the first time by a Dayton audience and her pleasing contralto voice was heard to much advantage in the selections chosen, and she gave the only encore of the evening in "Margarita." Miss Miller is a charming young singer and she made a distinctly favorable impression upon her hearers with the feeling manner in which her interpretations were given, and her numbers were among the most enjoyable features of the evening.—Daily News. CLARENCE EDDY

Mr. Eddy has been very active in the recital field since his return to Chicago and has many important bookings for the future.

Among those which will occupy his attention very shortly are three recitals which mark the opening of a large four manual organ at St. John's Episcopal Church at Victoria, B. C., the dates being August 11, 12 and 13.

Immediately following this important engagement he will play (on August 14, 15 and 16), three splendid programs on another large four manual, new organ at the Mt. Pleasant M. E. Church in Vancouver, B. C.

The press notices received by Mr. Eddy recently have been of remarkable caliber; a few extracts being here appended:

When it is said that fifteen hundred enjoyed the Clarence Eddy recital at the Johnson Memorial Church last night and that a hundred were turned away, being unable to gain admission, it is to give some idea of the success of this concert and the appreciation of this wonderful artist. It is impossible to speak of the glorious sight of the thrilled audience as this master of the organ swayed them from the depth of his theme to the lightness of his capriciousness. The charming personality of Clarence Eddy, teacher, organist and composer, his genial countenance, his sly humor, dry wit, and art for art's sake ideals, have made him respected and beloved in all musical circles of America. Wherever the best music may be heard, wherever his presence may encourage a struggling artist, or in the haunts of the musical brotherhood, the stocky figure, well proportioned head, with white hair and closely cropped beard and twinkling eye, Clarence Eddy is sure to appear. His fingers have lost none of their dexterity, either in the manipulation of keys or of stops, and his feet find the pedals with the same deft assurance. Eddy always had the knack for getting quickly acquainted with any instrument you could give him. This knack, so vital to the traveling organist is more noticeable than ever. Though scorning all assistance in the matter of page-turning or stop-changing, he kept things going as smoothly as if he had played on the Johnson Memorial organ every Sunday for years, and there was never a phrase which indicated a mistake in pulling a knob. The program was a masterpiece of art, pleasing the music lover.—Huntington (W. Va.) Herald-Dispatch.

A fine editorial on "Music at Williams" in the Williams (College) Record, concluded as follows:

Every effort should be made to provide similar opportunities for the college to hear good music next year. The aim of the recitals should be primarily cultural. A man who desires a well-rounded education will endeavor to form a habit of listening to the works of great composers. He who wishes to escape from time to time the provincial atmosphere of a small college in winter, will avail himself of musical opportunities. Yet those who select the programs should not forget that, to hold a college audience, music must amuse and please, as well as instruct. Possibly a brief oral comment or more complete annotations on the program would enable the uninitiated to follow the music. A recital similar to that by Mr. Eddy, in which selections of a light and popular character predominate, will hold as well as educate the undergraduate audience.

The three programs given in Dallas, Texas, in June, were models of excellence as may be seen by the first program which is here reproduced and some comment on all the programs taken from the Dallas press:

The most difficult pipe organ composition in the world, executed by the greatest organist in the world on what is admittedly the finest pipe organ in the world.

This was the rare combination which made the Eddy recital last night an epoch in the history of music in Dallas.

In the fourth number on the program Eddy undertook Thiele's "Theme, Variations and Finale," a composition declared by organ masters to be the most difficult ever written.

More intricate fingering, greater range of combination and expression and pedal work approaching the impossible for any but the most expert make this composition one seldom attempted by pipe organists.

The audience sat spellbound as the thundering tones of the deep bass mingled and blended with the delicate tone weavings of the high treble.

The range of tone was from that of the largest pipe, twenty-two inches across and sixteen feet long, to the smallest, five-sixteenths of an inch across and five-eighths of an inch long.

Eddy displayed nimbleness of foot and lightning rapidity of fingers that amazed the audience.

He played the bass register with his feet faster than the average pianist can manipulate the keys with ten fingers.—Dallas Despatch.

Mr. Eddy's program last night was classic to a degree and replete with evidences of the most careful thought and preparation in its arrangement. From a standpoint of pure music it could scarcely be surpassed. For instance, the first and final numbers afforded a contrast between the period of Bach and that of today. Bach's "Toccata in F Major" (1685-1750) began the concert. It closed with Charles Marie Widor's "Toccata in F Major" (from the fifth organ symphony). To the student the contrast was a wonderful delight, and even the amateur could enter into the pleasure. The heroic measure, the wonderful pedaling, the brilliant presentment of the classical structure brought round after round of applause.

Continuing the development of what we may call the theme of this program, Mr. Eddy gave as the second number three selections from the period of Bach—the first, rondo, "Soeur Monique," by Francois Couperin, once court pianist of France; second, "Minuet," by Jean Baptiste Lully, and third, "Gavotta," by Padre G. B. Martini, the last two distinguished opera composers of the French and Italian schools, respectively.

No more brilliant vehicle for a beautiful revelation of the charming romantic period could have been selected than these. In the Couperin rondo all the lilting grace and elegance of elaboration characteristic of his time were woven in a motif as delicate as the tracery of the ruffled laces worn by the cavaliers of a court which loved such melodies. Followed with stately pomp and measure the graceful minuet and came then the gay gavotte—perhaps to the audience as a whole one of the most captivating of the selections. It stole insidiously upon the senses, with subtle tones and delicate wavering, an elusive theme retreating from its own echo, a picture as entrancing as a fairy sunset blushing across a fragrant sea—until one feared, almost, to listen longer, lest the elfin songsters take fright and flee.

In the third number Mr. Eddy chose the "Fugue in E Flat" by Niccolo Porpora, a contemporary of Bach, and himself a great musician—so great that even today it is whispered that his melodies were appropriated in their entirety by certain musicians of his time whose names today mean much. The arrangement of this fugue is by M. Enrico Bossi, whom Mr. Eddy considers the leading organist of Italy.

With flawless accuracy, clear cut, decisive, the massive theme was developed into its monumental finale, the performance being, after the wonderful Thiele theme, the most majestic of the evening.—Dallas Morning News (June 12).

The third and concluding concert in the dedicatory program at the Scottish Rite Cathedral was given last night by Clarence Eddy, world-famed organist, to an audience that filled all available seats and overflowed into the hallways.

As on the previous occasions, those who profited by the opportunity to hear Mr. Eddy's performance were moved to the sincerest admiration of his genius, and all who were endowed with an appreciation and understanding of noble music from that most massive of all musical instruments, the pipe organ, had occasion to congratulate themselves upon their prescience in choosing last night's program. While the offerings for the final performance were not more classical nor diverse, perhaps, than those that preceded they appeared to some in attendance, who had heard all, to have been chosen with reference to their substantial musical quality and to have borne no suggestion of the exhibitional element. The organ, in other words, was set firmly to the sufficing task of producing music, without any obligation to display its versatility in the production of sensational contrasts in either tone or tempo.—Dallas Morning News (June 13). Serenata .....Moszkowski
Miss Louise Link

"Spring" .....Kjerulf
Miss Martha Nielson

Waltz E flat.....Durand
Miss Gruell

"Country Dance" .....Nevin
Misses Neilson and Enslow

At the close of the pupils' program, Miss Enslow, pianiste, entertained the audience with two piano selections by request, and Mr. Garst of the Garst studios appeared in well chosen vocal numbers. Miss Enslow's reading of the Leschetizky "Octave Intermezzo" was exceptional in many ways, and was very properly encored.

LYRAVINE VOTAW

Miss Lyravine Votaw, the contralto, whose work has been received with so much delight wherever she has been heard during the season, has been engaged as contralto soloist at the Woodlawn Park Presbyterian Church and has also accepted a position on the faculty of the Stevens School of Music at 5828 Woodlawn avenue, where she will teach throughout the summer.

HARRY MURRISON

Some recent comment on the work of Harry Murrison, bass-baritone, is as follows:

Concert. Mr. Harry R. Murrison gave a superb interpretation of the great aria, "Eri tu," (Un Ballo in Maschea), Verdi. His magnificent voice, heard by many for the first time was a delightful revelation. A tremendous round of applause recalled him to sing "Die Bieden Grenadiere—The Leader, Alliance, Ohio.

Recital. The opera aria, "Infelice" (Ernani) was to my mind the best work presented by the singer during the evening. Mr. Murrison's big, resonant voice is just suited to this style of singing and he carried the audience in almost breathless attention to the close of this famous aria—The Highlander, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Messiah." Murrison's first recitative and air, "Thus Saith the Lord," and "But Who May Abide," was done in true oratorio style. The audience seemed to hear, not a man singing, but the prophet of old shaking the hearts of the people with terrible words of the Lord of Hosts.—Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Il Trovatore." Mr. Harry R. Murrison, as the "Count di Luna," gave a strong interpretation of the role. He is a great opera baritone.—Fegus County Leader, Lewiston, Mont.

"Bohemian Girl." As "Devilshoof," chief of the gypsies, Mr. Harry Murrison made a great hit. He looked, acted and sang the part with a fine sense of proportion.—The Courier, Deadwood, S. D.

"Faust." Mr. Harry R. Murrison who sang the role of "Mephisto," won perhaps the most favor with the audience. His portrayal, histrionically, of the part is clever, and his singing superb.—Dakota Herald, Yankton, S. D.

"Faust." Harry Murrison, the basso, assumed the role of "Mephisto," which calls for some splendid vocal effort and he failed not in the slightest degree.—Daily Republican, Mitchell, S. D.

"In Fairyland." The rollicking, resonant tones of Mr. Murrison's big baritone completely captured the audience in his singing of "Robin Goodfellow," and he was compelled to repeat it.—The Messenger, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Concert. Harry R. Murrison, baritone, who enjoys the distinction of being a soloist in a prominent New York church, was the soloist of the evening. Among his numbers was a "Stein Song," which gave him opportunity to fully display his magnificent voice, which is a rich ringing baritone of wide compass.—Evening Journal, Matteawan, N. Y.

Recital. Mr. Murrison is the most artistic singer that has ever appeared in Chariton. His voice is powerful and under wonderful control and his audience was delighted with his singing, encoring him repeatedly.—The Patriot, Chariton, Iowa. (Advertisement.)

MARY LINDSAY OLIVER

Following is the fine program given recently in Moline, Ill., by Arvid Owens, the talented eight-year-old pupil of Miss Mary Lindsay Oliver, assisted by Miss Quinlan, soprano, and Mr. Spencer, tenor:

Sonatina
Spiritoso
Andante ..... Clementi
Vivace

Cavatina from "Faust" ..... Gounod
Murmuring Breezes ..... Jensen
Prelude No. 1 ..... Bach
Solfegietto ..... Em. Bach
Fur Elise ..... Beethoven
Aria from "Louise" ..... Charpentier
Calm as the Night ..... Oliver
First Loss
The Poor Orphan
The Rocking Horse ..... Schumann
Traumerei

Duet from "Faust" ..... Gounod
Butterflies ..... Grieg
You and I (written for Arvid) ..... Brodine
Hunting Song Waltz (for the piano) ..... Gurlitt

The Rock Island Union comments as follows:

Arvid Owens of this city, the eight-year-old pianist, was heard in recital for the first time last evening, at the Oliver Studio in Moline. For a young player Arvid has a stage presence that is commendable, and has a grasp of musical meaning which one often finds wanting in older and more experienced players. The numbers were all splendidly given, especially "Butterflies," by Grieg, and "You and I," by P. Brodine, written for the young man.

The Moline Evening Mail reports as follows:

Arvid is only eight years old, but he displays the ability of a matured musician and his stage presence last evening was worthy of special comment. The recital was the first that he has ever given and he gave his program in a serious manner worthy of a much older pupil. His numbers were well chosen and remarkably well given.

The Moline Dispatch gives the following detail:

The fact that Arvid Owens, eight-year-old pianist, is a child of unusual attainments and mind was probably never so forcibly brought before the public as last evening, when he appeared in recital at the studio of his teacher, Miss Mary Lindsay-Oliver, before a large audience of interested people. He may indeed be compared to Mozart in the way he has displayed natural musical ability at so early an age, ability to execute and interpret some of the very highest musical works and master a splendid technic.

His program called for a demonstration of his many qualities, remarkable among which is his reliable memory and accuracy and delicacy and beauty of tone. Opening with a small sonata by Clementi with spiritoso, andante and vivace movements which it seemed really impossible for that small figure in white and the tiny, well-shaped fingers to execute, he at once had his audience marveling at his variety of expression and tone. His second number, Bach's "Prelude No. 1," he grasped with a thorough understanding that is not often accomplished, and following "Solfegietto" (Emanuel Bach) and Beethoven's "Fur Elise," he was given hearty applause and responded with a charming "Slumber Song," by Gurlitt.

A group of Schumann numbers brought out his artistic interprelative skill and he played "Traumerei" with a musical feeling and poetic expression that so impressed his listeners that they insisted on a repetition of the number.

Grieg's "Butterflies," probably the most difficult number on his program, was given remarkable rendition, with true understanding and an exhibition of wonderful power and flexibility. His playing of "You and I," which was especially written for him by P. Brodine, and of which he is particularly fond, was charming, and after repeating it as an encore he played "Hunting Song" (Gurlitt), assisted on a second piano by Miss Oliver, playing with a rhythm and with expression that were delightful.

Bargman.—Miss Sylvia Bargman, pianist, played a group of Liszt numbers with great success at the concert of July 15 in the series of summer concerts being given by the Chicago Musical College at Ziegfield Hall.

FREE SCHOLARSHIPS

We were asked, the other day, to state clearly our objection to free scholarships.

We have NO OBJECTION whatever to free scholarships. If any teacher or any school wishes to be so altruistic, in any given case, as to assign free lessons to anyone, whether there is present a hope of future benefit to the teacher or not, that is entirely within the privileges of the teacher or the school.

The action may be one of charity, or it may be one of business, but so long as it is kept a matter between the pupil and the teacher or school it is the concern of no one else.

What we do object to, however, is the ADVERTISING of "free scholarships."

This, after years of study of the situation, has resolved itself into nothing more nor less than a catchpenny device for attracting the attention of would-be students to the school so advertising, and there seems only a very remote intention of helping any of these students by the actual assignment to them of free scholarships.

The plan is, rather, to induce them to take "partial scholarships," as a substitute for the "free scholarships, the "last one" of which has so often "just been assigned" to someone else before the arrival of the latest hopeful.

The "partial" scholarship is, however, always plentiful enough, and the trickery in the whole matter lies in the fact that applicants are led to believe that in accepting this "favor" they are really getting a "bargain."

As an actual matter of fact they are getting JUST WHAT THEY PAY FOR.

If a teacher can give certain pupils at "partial" rates—i. e., some deduction from the rate scheduled in the catalogue of the school—he can, if he wishes, give everybody at that rate. If, for instance, he is catalogued at four dollars an hour, and gives some of his lessons at two dollars, nothing is plainer than the inference that his time is actually worth just two dollars an hour and the students who are paying four dollars are paying too much.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

In considering any special mediums of advertisement, most teachers and schools look carefully to the collateral advantages.

For instance, they know that a paper devoted to music wholly is read very largely by those interested intensely in music, and they know also that publicity in that paper counts for a great deal in exactly the proper places.

They know, too, and properly insist, that if they advertise in a music paper, it will announce and comment on the functions given by them at all times of the year.

But there is no such advantage attaching to the advertising in the daily newspapers of Chicago. Long ago they have (with but meagre exception) tabooed all purely

In "The Song Birds," an operetta dealing farcically with the opera situation in New York, and introducing Mmes. Yelba, and Tetterzina, and M. Pantson, De Restcure, etc., as well as Managers Hammershine and Gagagaza there is a lot of clever nonsense, as for instance when Gagagaza says, "Why should I trouble to present opera in English so long as there are so many people who are able to pretend that they understand the German opera;" and also there is a delightful satire in the statement of Oscar Hammershine that he will present opera in English with an all Italian company but that there is "no hurry" about putting these people at work on the English language since "the opera does not open until week after next," and also in his assertion that "when a singer gets real busy in grand opera it makes no difference what language he is singing in."

"Say, Ed, j'know they're goin' to put the trotters on the blink?"

"Well," quoth Ed, a merry wag, "mebbe they have hit the pace too fast."

"Aw, quit yer kiddin', Ed," spoke Mame. "Don't you think it's rotten?"

THE ORGANISTS' CONVENTION

Music News printed, last week a very complete detail of the organ recitals and the papers which will be heard at the National Association of Organists convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., August 4 to 9.

If this copy was not received please drop us a card and we will send one immediately.

The program is certainly a fine one and the indications are plentiful that this convention will be by far the most largely attended in the history of the organization.

Ocean Grove affords a multiplicity of opportunities for relaxation and entertainment along many lines and the week there will certainly be both an instructive one and also a very pleasant vacation period.

The performance of "The Messiah" at the great auditorium on Saturday night, August 9, will be a notable one. There will be fine soloists, full orchestra, great organ and an immense chorus from Ocean Grove and New York under the baton of Tali Esen Morgan.

The accompanying picture is one which is used on an Ocean Grove circular and is reproduced here just to give an idea of the ocean as seen from this charming resort.

The following items are taken from the N. A. O. News, published at Ocean Grove in July.

SEASON FROM JUNE 1 TO OCTOBER 1
Ocean Grove, N. J.
THERE IS WEALTH IN THY BILLOWS O SEA
LIKE THE WEALTH OF LEGENDS OF OLD
AND THAT WEALTH IN THY BILLOWS, O SEA IS BETTER THAN TREASURES OF GOLD.

Letter from Carl Rupprecht

The first number of the new official organ of the N. A. O. came to hand and was read with great interest

The movement of a national association of organists is very important and must be pushed forward. It fills a long felt want, for who has not deplored the fact that the music in too many of our churches is of a worldly and flippant character, foreign to the divine service and executed by careless and untrained hands. Organists seldom hear their fellows of the same denomination as their own and so they easily fall into a rut. But it is important that they enlarge their horizon and have a knowledge.

The Fifth Anniversary Number of MUSIC NEWS will be something of Very Unusual Significance and Very Great Importance to Advertisers.

The Date will be October 10th. MAKE RESERVATIONS OF SPACE EARLY.
Call, Write or Phone Harrison 7169.

Therefore the organists must be brought together and learn from able and serious men and women how to improve and elevate their art. This can be brought about only by a great democratic association, like the N. A. O., the official organ and most effectively by the convention that has for its object the uplifting of the music in divine worship and the advancement of the organist in his art. Therefore every organist of the United States should promptly become a member of the N. A. O. and make it possible to attend our convention in August at Ocean Grove. Remembering my experience at the last year's convention I can assure every one that they'll never regret it but return to their homes in a most enthusiastic mood. They will have gotten ideas that will greatly influence them in their work, they will enjoy the fellowship of their colleagues, in fact, they will be surprised at the sociability and total lack of snobbishness of all members and officials, they will come as strangers but remain so only a few minutes. They will have an exhilaratingly good time, especially at the banquet, and as to Ocean Grove, they will find an ideal spot—a place that gives the term "summer resort" a new definition. In the future it may be desirable, yes, I think necessary, for the advancement of the cause, to move the convention to other places, but it will not be possible to find a place in the entire United States better adapted in every way for an organists' convention than Ocean Grove.

CARL RUPPRECHT.

The Coming Convention—By W. D. Armstrong, State President N. A. O. for Illinois

The organ and organ playing are coming more and more into prominence. The question arises, how is the organist going to keep in touch with new ideas, and the new works for his instrument? In the first place he must hear good playing, by artists of ability and reputation; and hear compositions correctly performed. This is only possible by taking a much needed vacation and coming to some musical center where these advantages exist. In the second place, much can be gained by discussing subjects relating to this art, and meeting those who are interested in the same lines. I think Ocean Grove, with New York, Philadelphia, and other cities in the vicinity, is an ideal place for one to spend several weeks. A large number of organists from the west should be present at the next meeting.

Looking to the Future

If there is any possibility of holding a winter convention or re-union in Chicago or some other Western point, by all means the plan ought to be carried out. The August convention is held at a time when practically every organist is on a vacation and it is easy to find the time to attend. In the winter time it is different. The organists are hard at work and it is more difficult to find time to attend a convention than it would be to find the money. Perhaps between Christmas and New Year's day would be a good time. However, Christmas day comes on Thursday, and many of our leading organists have services on the Sunday and Christmas. Possibly the first week of the New Year would be a convenient time. A special train and a very low rate of fare could be secured from New York and at least a hundred organists would go. Anyway, let the coming convention canvass the matter and come to a decision. One thing is certain, there must be more than the one convention a year. Possibly the better plan would be to hold a western, a southern and the eastern convention, each section electing its own officers, and members of the National committee, and this committee to elect the National president.

Tali Esen Morgan's Work

(Editorial from Musical America of New York)

The remarkable spectacle of nine thousand music lovers gathered in one auditorium to hear a program of orchestral and choral numbers last Saturday night at Ocean Grove, attracts attention to the work being done by Tali Esen Morgan at the famous summer resort.

Ordinarily it would be considered impossible to draw so large an audience, in the heart of summer, for the purpose of hearing music, and the fact that Mme. Schumann-Heink was the soloist on this particular occasion does not, in itself, account for the great gathering, for the entire series of programs is equally well patronized. With Schumann-Heink as the principal drawing card, the best seats in the auditorium sold for $2.50, and they were all taken.

The secret of the success of these concerts—at a time of the year when concerts are a rarity in this country—lies primarily in the work and influence of one man—Tali Esen Morgan. He has made them national rather than local undertakings, and by organizing the excellent material provided from all parts of America into an active, enthusiastic body, and keeping the musical standard always on a high level, he receives the support that manifests itself as it did last Saturday night.

Besides the excellent orchestra, composed of young men and women, Mr. Morgan has under his direction an immense chorus which studies and presents an ambitious repertoire of choral works. The children's chorus is another interesting feature of his work.

If Mr. Morgan's unique ideas were followed in other sections of the country the annual exodus of our musicians to Europe would be materially lessened.

A LETTER FROM WILLIAM C. CARL

July 17, 1913.

Val-Mont, Switzerland.

My Dear Dr. Morgan:

My best wishes for the convention of 1913, to yourself, the board of directors and the members of the N. A. O.

Its success was fully assured before my departure for Europe, and I am confident the convention of this year will excel all others.

I regret exceedingly to be absent and miss attending the various sessions.

May the work accomplished this summer do much for the advancement of organ music in our own dear country.

All Europe is taking notice of the great studies and progress being made.

Best greetings,

WILLIAM C. CARL.

AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF NORMAL METHODS

Herewith are given likenesses of those who have greatly to do with the success of the American Institute of Normal Methods, given each summer at Northwestern University in Evanston. It may be said at once that the American Institute of Normal Methods stands for protection to the public schools from "medium skill," as regards public school music.

WILLARD HALL

The faculty of this summer school is comprised of men prominently associated with the public school music work of the country. Among these may be mentioned Edward B. Birge, Mus. Bac., general supervisor of the public school music at Indianapolis, Ind. Another whose name is familiar to musicians the length and breadth of the country is that of Otto Miessner. Mr. Miessner conducted the class of musical appreciation to the evident delight and very great profit of the teachers attending from practically every school in the country. Ably assisting Mr. Miessner in giving illustrations at the piano was Miss Eleanor Kimberly, assistant supervisor of music at Minnneapolis, Minn.

VIOLET V. COLLINS

FRANK D. FARR

Needless to state, this class is designed to impart to the members keener insight into musical form. The song, rondo and sonata are analyzed and explained. Method work included a critical study of pedagogical principals upon which successful methods in teaching public school music must be based.

One profitable and interesting afternoon session was devoted by Mr. Miessner to dance forms, including the French, Old English and Spanish, among which were the Musette, Gavotte and Bouree, the latter being fittingly illustrated by readings from Bach's music.

EDWARD B. BIRGE

W. OTTO MIESSNER

Miss Alice Inskeep, supervisor of music at Cedar Rapids, Ia., had charge of a most interesting class, and Earle Killeen of Cedar Rapids, Ia., proved to be a valuable member of the faculty.

Willard Hall, one of the beautiful dormitories of the Northwestern University, provided a home for the visiting teachers, while Music Hall and Fisk Hall were the scene of many fine music functions, several of which have been reported in Music News.

Mr. Frank D. Farr proved to be a courteous and intelligent manager of the institute, and the work of Violet V. Collins of the Music Department of Silver, Burdett and Company, was effective throughout. The teachers went away on last Saturday night feeling that the session had been a most profitable one. The attendance was the largest in its history.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The closing concert of the summer series at the American Conservatory of Music took place on Wednesday morning before an audience which filled Kimball Hall and which was very demonstrative in approval of the work of the artists of the program.

Mr. Silvio Scionti played fourteen of the smaller pieces of Schumann in a group, gave the "C Sharp Minor Nocturne" and the "A Flat Ballade" of Chopin, and closed with a movement from the Liszt "B Minor Sonata" and the "March Militaire" by Schubert-Liszt, all of which he played with his customary brilliance and enthusiasm.

Louise Hattstaedt-Winter sang a group of chansons by Hahn, Massenet and Weckerlin, proving anew her fine use of French, and in the English text songs she gave ample proof that her enuncation of English has improved.

Her voice is continually growing and her use of it, always adept, has now become artistic in a very fine degree.

The quality is always sweet and the skill and taste with which she manages dynamic questions is very marked.

Two of the Woodforde-Finden songs, "Indian Love Lyrics," were given in convincingly good style; Lisa Lehmann's "Wood Pigeon" was charming, and "The Wren," by the same composer, was a piece of dainty coloratura it would be difficult to excel.

C. E. W.

Kurtz.—George Ralph Kurtz, who has been supplying the organ at the Second Baptist Church, is to head the piano and organ department in the Fargo (N. D.) Conservatory next year. Mr. Kurtz will be remembered as the organist at the old Second Baptist Church for nearly seven years under Milon R. Harris, and later at the Third Presbyterian.

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERTS

The third in the series of summer night concerts at Warren Avenue Congregational Church, introduced four artists in a program of great variety and much interest.

Miss Hazel Dell Neff, who taught last year at a college in the south and who this season is remaining at her home in Plymouth, Ind., in the intervals between her extensive concert giving, was the soprano of the occasion and again pleased the Warren avenue clientele very much, having once before appeared in the same church under the same auspices.

GERALD HUNT

ROBERT BARRON

Her concert style is admirable and her charm for an audience is undeniably great. Her voice is a clear, high soprano, with ample volume in the middle register and soaring to great altitude with perfect ease. Spross' "Yesterday and Today" proved an admirable opening number and this was followed by a reading of the "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto," which was clean cut and beautiful, excelling especially in the ease with which its trills and other embellishments were manipulated.

In the second group Abt's cunning "Cuckoo" was entirely suited to her style, and Ashford's "The Dawn," and Russell's "Sunset" proved to have much intrinsic value in each case and they were done by Miss Neff with certainty and effect. For encore she gave the florid arrangement of "Comin' Thro' the Rye" used by Jenny Lind, with much brilliance, and at the close offered Carrie Jacobs-Bond's "Nothin' But Love" to the delight of the audience.

Mr. Gerald Hunt of South Bend, Ind., who gave so successful a recital in his home city very recently, was the other singer on Thursday and showed his basso-cantante voice to much advantage. His tone is round and full, while at the same time it is of unusual mellowness, and he uses it in a way to prove that his study has been extensive and well directed.

"Mary of Allendale" (Old English), "By the Sea" (Schubert), and "Dreams in the Twilight" (Strauss) were suave in treatment and musical in effect, while Bush's "The Eagle," afforded opportunity for some dramatic power.

For second group Grieg's "At the Brookside," proved to be refreshingly novel and melodious, while the "Rhein Wine Song" of Ries was sung with much display of virtuosity. In this group the charming manuscript song by Max Wald, "The Perfect Hour," was to have been sung but unfortunately the copy was lost and Mr. Hunt had to substitute "Mother o' Mine" by Tours, a song which was received, however, with every demonstration of approval. An encore being demanded an Irish humoreske was sung with much unction and effect.

HAZEL DELL NEFF

Edith Shaw Brown proved herself to be a pianist of refined charm and adequate brilliancy. Her various appearances of the past season, before the Amateur Musical Club and elsewhere had marked her as a pianist to be reckoned with and the Warren Avenue audience was not slow to endorse the general verdict of "excellent."

A "Nocturne" of Chopin was played with very beautiful singing tone and the "Fantasie Impromptu" by the same composer was crystal clear in effect, while a G Minor "Prelude" (played for encore) was delightful in its evenness and clarity.

Steinway Piano Used

The shimmering "Caprice No. 2" by Paganini-Schumann was a piece of piano playing of great value, a Henselt "Etude" was carefully done and the Rachmaninoff "Prelude" in G Minor was not only broad and masterly, but it was also the very epitome of pure piano tone.

The remaining soloist was Robert Barron, a young violinist, who has made a good impresion wherever he has played, and who at this time excelled his previous efforts appreciably.

This young man has good, clear tone and very unusual depth and power, while his temperament is such that he gives interesting and original interpretation to whatever he presents. The very lovely "Melody" by Charles G. Dawes was exceptionally well done, the "Humoreske" by Borowski proved to be thoroughly and piquantly interesting, the "Polish Dance" of Drake was positively scintillant and the Vieuxtemps "Ballade et Polonaise" provided much of interest and was also an exposition of good violin playing which was so enthusiastically received by the audience that an encore was necessary, Mr. Barron choosing for the purpose the well known and much liked "Minuet" by Beethoven.

EDITH SHAW BROWN

MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

The program at the MacBurney Studios on Monday night, given in full detail here, was the medium of introducing to a studio full of enthusiasts the work of Miss Olga Leaman, a young soprano whose work was so fine and whose natural endowments, vocally, are so great that there is no hesitation in predicting for her a pronounced success in the work she has chosen.

She has good presence, perfect poise and fine interpretative abilities, while her voice is remarkable, both for range and sonority.

In its lower tones it has a contralto-like quality which is very effective, but it runs also the full scale of soprano requirements, being however, of solid quality and much power throughout its range.

Without detailing the various songs of the program it is but fair to say that each one was given in a way to convincingly prove that it had been most carefully chosen and studied and that there was full appreciation of the time and the place as well as perfect understanding with the admirable accompaniments of William Lester.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

The summer night concert of Monday evening drew an almost completely filled house at the University and the Imperial Quartet, which furnished the program was given a reception which must have been gratifying in the extreme.

This organization—composed of Wallace Moody, Robert Wood, Ben Q. Tuffts and Julian Worthington, has now been intact for so long a time that a perfect ensemble has been established, and as each member of the quartet is a thorough musician it follows naturally that the interpretative power of this body has grown to be wonderfully varied and always convincing.

It would be difficult indeed to suggest wherein the balance of the voices could be improved. There is a perfect proportion and an exact blending at all times and the quality of each individual voice as it, from time to time, comes forward in solo phrase is invariably sweet and sufficiently powerful as well.

The program was chosen with a view to summer night conditions, of course, but it was nevertheless one of marked significance and easily proved the Imperials to have gone a long way in their effort to make a concert by a male quartet something more than merely an "entertainment," and that, in competent hands it may, in fact, be made a program of real music.

The only numbers sung on Monday which were trivial were "Golden Bells," (Dion de Marbelle), and "Goodnight, Little Girl, Goodnight," by Macy, and these were so more in the banality of the poems than in the music itself, which in the case of Macy is possible at least.

The Callicott, Keller and Mendelssohn pieces were truly dignified. In the case of the "Battle Hymn," the Julia Ward Howe verse is so superb as to constitute a separate and distinct charm.

Mr. Worthington in the Damrosch number gave ample evidences of dramatic growth and again displayed an excellent voice. The enunciation of text in this song was something remarkable and was as effective as the spoken word would have been. Mr. Worthington was received with great acclaim and for encore gave a suave and vocally impressive reading of the Schumann "Ich Grolle Nicht."

The other soloist was Robert Wood, whose singing of the "Onaway, Awake Beloved" had much to commend it—his voice being very rich in its best range and his enunciation also being good.

For encore he gave an unusually smooth reading of "One Perfect Day," an exquisite song by Hill.

Besides the programmed number by Carrie Jacobs-Bond her "Just Awearyin' for You" was also given, and these two pieces were found to be of special charm in quartet form and very especially so as given at this time.

The Buck, and Clough-Leighter numbers were crisp in form and very strong in presentment, while the Tosti piece proved to be a musical bon bon, very pretty and very much relished by the audience.

Lemon's "My Ain Folk" was sung with a purity and an expressiveness which but few soloists could equal while "Sweet Genevieve," "The Shoogy Shoo," Nevin's "Rosary" and "Old Folks at Home" (encores), were all done with simplicity of style and perfection of musical impressiveness.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

The last of the summer concerts at the School of Music of Northwestern took place on Wednesday evening at Music Hall in Evanston, a place entirely inadequate to meet the demands of the occasion in the way of seating capacity and which is uncomfortably crowded at every function given by the school. Certainly the Northwestern University School of Music is in very great need of a large music building with a hall which will accommodate much greater audiences than new.

On Wednesday Mr. Walter Allen Stults sang a fine program of songs, and variety was given by the introduction of some two-piano pieces in which Mr. Arne Oldberg and Mr. Carl M. Beecher shone to brilliant advantage.

The "Variations," by Schumann, were played with most exquisite musicianship; the "Le Matin" of Chaminade was a piece of crystal clarity, and the Saint-Saens "Variations" introduced every kind of technical virtuosity as well as continual show of interpretative excellence.

Such matters as rhythm and shading, so essential in this kind of work, were flawless, and the speed and clarity of scales and arpeggi were marvelous; but, quite aside from such commonplace excellencies, there was a QUALITY to the combined tone and a refinement of manipulation which were remarkable, indeed. The two players were as one on all these points, and the audience appreciated to the final degree and gave them a genuine ovation.

The extreme refinement and beauty of Mr. Beecher's work at the first piano in the Chaminade piece were such as to engender the wish to hear him in extensive solo work, and Mr. Oldberg supplemented the ensemble work falling to him by appearing also as accompanist to Mr. Stults, a position he filled with distinction.

Mr. Stults sang first the "Confutatis Maledictus" from the Verdi "Manzoni Requiem," and in this the resonance of his voice was shown to advantage, as well as the breadth and general style of his interpretative thought.

The well known bass aria from "Magic Flute," by Mozart, was sung with utter suavity, and a group of German text songs by Strauss, Hermann, Hollaender and Hinton introduced many kinds of vocal delight.

Mr. Stults has attained a refinement of vocalization which, while it subtracts no whit of the intensity or passion naturally in his voice, yet has the effect of beautifying every song he presents. He has grown very suave and very introspective in his work, and this German group on Wednesday night was an exposition of pure song.

Beethoven's "Creation's Hymn" opened the last group, being followed by Debussy's "Mandoline," which was sung so well (and accompanied so delightfully) that the audience insisted on a repetition.

"The Pauper's Drive" (Homer) was given with repression, but at the same time it was intensely dramatic and the contrast in the closing phrases was admirably managed. Ware's sugary "Boat Song" was again pleasingly in evidence, and the program ended with "I'm a Roamer Bold" (Mendelssohn), which Mr. Stults invested with great piquancy and delivered with superb aplomb. The accompaniment to this also was very exceptional. C. E. W.

OPERA AT RAVINIA

The tabloid operas being given at Ravinia Park this week, and which are to continue for a month, are put on in immensely better way than any which have hitherto attracted audiences to Ravinia, and such is the demand for opera in this community, it has passed into an axiom at Ravinia that the big crowds are sure to follow upon the announcement of opera.

On Tuesday evening the first act of "Butterfly" was witnessed and this act, given in completion, was vastly preferable to most of the hodge podge "arrangements" presented in previous years.

The scenery (loaned by the Chicago Grand Opera Company) was admirable and the stage arrangement and management was such as to give a dignity and completeness to the performance never before witnessed at Ravinia.

The costumes, lighting effects and every detail of the performance were admirably cared for and the "atmosphere" created was appreciably like that in a regular opera house.

The chorus has been well chosen and in the Puccini work had doubtless been thoroughly rehearsed while the orchestra, under the Parelli baton, was superb.

Even in a place where the stage was seen but poorly, and with much disturbance of various kinds to distract attention, the fountain of harmony continually welling up from the players, the exquisite shading and the acute marking of necessary "points" was delightful—nothing finer has been heard even in the Auditorium.

The principals were well chosen and proved mostly to be favorites with the audience.

Miss Lois Ewell, fresh from foreign study, sang well and acted with effect. Florence Mulford was hampered with a part not at all suitable and was also made up very poorly—it is to be hoped that other parts assigned her will be more effective. Louis Kreidler again showed a suave style and good voice. William Schuster displayed again the peculiarly "open" tone by which he is so well known and also a fine acquaintance with opera routine.

Phil Fein, in the small part of the "Marriage Broker" was very pleasing and had the distinction of being the one whose enunciation was so good as to make him by far the best understood singer on the stage, while Lenoid Samoloff displayed a voice quite equal to the "Pinkerton" demands, and at the close of the act, in the duet with Miss Ewell, he shared equally with her in a genuinely enthusiastic demonstration from the audience. C. E. W.

The Elderly Person

The mist was rising and spreading away from the strengthening warmth of the sun as the Comrade walked down the long path of boards on trestles which led to the entrance of the boat house on the edge of the great river. On either side of the walk and surrounding the house itself were clumps of willows in all ages of growth. Tall and short, plump and slender, wide-spreading or lithe and swaying, they grouped their trunks and branches in picturesque tangles, nodding and bending their fresh greenery in welcome to the visitors who came to them in the early hours. The Elderly Person, possessing that sense of irresponsibility which attends a guest, followed the decided tread of the Comrade leisurely and with that anticipatory sense which sends little thrills coursing up and down the physical being. For here was being undertaken a tricksy transaction—the effort to live over again one of the episodes of life which belonged to the two men when there were not the figurative snows of so many winters upon their heads. Nearly everyone longs to do such things. Many have not the courage to dare the danger and spoil a memory. Many are afraid of their friends and more are afraid of themselves. In no one thing, however, is the adage about the Lord's attitude toward a coward more marked than in such undertaking. It is absolutely simple, if one preserves his simplicity. If the pleasure belonged to a day when modest adventures brought satisfaction, then one should approach the endeavor to reproduce that pleasure with the same sort of spirit in which it was first enjoyed. One always retains the spirit; he can be sure, if he has the real desire, to repeat the privilege. It all depends upon what one takes along as to what he will bring back.

The Comrade wheeled the long slender boat down the runway and pushed it off of the truck into the water with a long, gliding swish that was musical. On the bow was a much-loved daughter's name. Its letters revived anew memories of another boat bearing the same cluster, cherishing a sweet life's influence all too short, and never forgotten throughout the years that had come and gone since her name was first spoken. The Comrade piled the cushions in the inviting stern and steadied the shallow cedar frame while the Elderly Person stowed himself away comfortably. Then he gave it a push, sprang on the bow, slid into the seat and slipped the long spruce blades into the rowlocks. The current picked up the shallop easily and proposed at once to take charge of affairs while the Comrade rolled back his sleeves and unfastened his collar. But he had plans to go up stream, and so he put the wide spoons of his oars into the water with such vigor and certainty that the current at once gave up its self-appointed task and went after less experienced game.

Away shot the little craft under the strong but easy swinging strokes. Both men smiled at the sensation and knew that they had not changed a bit and that the mild adventure would have its old-time charm despite the changes which passing years had brought to the stately river and to the men who were not as young as they used to be, however much they affected otherwise.

In the willows lining the shore profusely the red-winged blackbirds were darting in and out just as of old. There were plenty of jays, too, screaming and flying in their businesslike manner, like brokers rushing from post to post in the exchanges. An occasional cuckoo was hiding under the thick foliage; a secretive bird is he. In widened clearings the houseboats of the squatters were safely entrenched for the season, some content to rest on the mud of the falling river, but more of them anchored on logs and vagrant supports pressed into service by the owners, who accepted what was handiest as theirs by that right which they seem to feel belongs to those who take little care as to how they are to be cared for. In front of the mill was a great boom or outer circle of logs chained to one another end to end to protect the heaped up logs brought down the stream from the islands not far away. The current hurried along down so rapidly that the impetus from the quick strokes of the oars against it gave a sense of double swiftness, as though we were apparently going twice as fast as we really were. Suddenly a little jerk indicated the turn of the boat's course, and directly it was out in the open, the wide expanse of flowing water underneath and the great arch of sky overhead. That feeling of infinity which controls the spirit when the body is close to the restless rushing water touched all the chords of being. The little boat danced on the surface, a diminutive shell playing carelessly upon the shoulders of a mighty, overwhelming, yet kindly giant. There was tolerance and forbearance in its attitude so long as its laws were obeyed and its patience was not taken for granted. The sun, rising even higher, brought sparkle to the little ruffles raised by the light wind as it skipped along touching the water here and there. Up in the sky were the fleets of white merchantmen gathering tor their journeys to far-away havens. Nearer and nearer came the green islands. Once these were called sand bars and towheads, because of their bare and unadorned conditions. But flying friendly winds and migrating birds carried seeds and pollen in that helpful missionary way which makes for nature's constant ability to cope with difficult problems and keep up with the progress she has ever before her. Now thick growths of elm, maple, basswood, thorn and other tall growing trees fight for precedence, while the busy willow sends up its ready shoots anywhere and everywhere. It is quite patient when it is cut down at any stage of growth. It knows that it will be replaced by other members of the family at once and in due time possess the land.

island, the water was more sluggish. The nostrils found that heavily-scented air too which abides where growth is thick. Long endlessly weaving ropes of the wild grape held out tendrils heavy with the fragrance of the new bloom. The odor is pungent and spicy with the breath of lavish richness, almost tropical. A tiny indentation in the shore proved to be the inlet to a miniature lake in the heart of the island. Its slowly moving body was covered with the pollen of the poplars and cottonwood. Barriers of floating logs and brush obstructed the devious way, and long-stemmed water-loving plants grew thick and leaned over to make entrance and exit difficult. It was all familiarly beautiful and vistas unfolded one after another like visions of past scenes long held dear. In the open once more was found the increasingly swift current which betokened the nearby presence of some serious obstruction to the stream. In reply to a look of inquiry the Comrade said yes, the old "dam" was still there and soon he was battling with its swirl and surmounting its crest and in the calm waters above its mild fury. Here was the point where the children found the nest of young cardinals and called the place "Cardinal Point." But here, too, association whispered in reminder, lived always a thrush who sang earliest and latest of his tribe. The oars rested quietly a moment, and then, wondrous mystery of mysteries, out from the tree-tops and over the sounding board of smooth water floated once more the exquisite notes of matchless melody. A memory became a reality. Again and again it sounded the loving assurance that it loved the wildness and solitude and kept alive in its day the love its forbears had earlier acquired for this abode of beauty. The song soared aloft and sweetened the very air by its clinging charm. It set its seal upon the joy of the day and chastened with a benediction the lives of those who listened with ears newly attuned to its ages-old message. For it sang in unchanged beauty of unchanging beauty.

"I guess it wasn't a disappointment," the Comrade said, as they parted The Elderly Person gave him a handshake not to be lightly forgotten.

"QUO VADIS"

The Kleine-Cines photodrama of "Quo Vadis," of which such glowing accounts have been circulated since its initial exhibition at the Astor Theater, New York City, and McVickers' Theater, Chicago, has been booked for an indefinite engagement at Joe Howard's Theater, formerly the Whitney Opera, commencing Sunday (matinee) August 3.

"Quo Vadis," as projected on the screen from those wonderful films which were made in Rome, Italy, vividly visualize in historically correct detail Henryk Sienkiewicz's powerful romance of the final years of the reign of Nero, the last of the Caesars.

It is not possible to recount in cold type the absorbing interest that grips the auditor while viewing this masterpiece in the art of motion photography which, to obtain, must have cost a fabulous sum.

The management claims and it is not doubted, that the Cines photodrama plant in Rome was put to the expenditure of more than $150,000 for the building of the massive scenes and the making of elaborate costumes of the period in which to clothe the 3,500 and more actors who enacted again the scenes so graphically pictured by the pen of the famous Russian novelist.

"Quo Vadis" the story, and "Quo Vadis" on the stage has thrilled audiences in every part of the civilized world. It is an absorbing romance that has won for its author an everlasting niche in the hall of art and literature. Yet it remained for "Quo Vadis" in photos to furnish an awe-inspiring visualization of Roman society under Nero, with its orgies and excesses, its pomp and pageantry, inhuman arenic atrocities and barbaric revels, its debauchery by sword and fire, and its persecution of the early Christians as here exemplified in the actual burning of Rome, the martyrs thrown to the savage beasts, the human torches to light Nero's garden, and the struggle and conquering of a savage bull at the hands of the giant Ursus.

The many exciting scenes in the book have been faithfully reproduced in the pictures of "Quo Vadis," which are recorded on eight reels, each of which is more than 9,000 feet in length, making an entertainment that runs for two hours and a half, every minute of which holds the auditor spellbound.

EDITORIAL

local music functions, and, as a very general rule, they absolutely ignore all school and studio concerts.

This being the case, each school or private teacher placing an advertisement in a daily newspaper should study well the actual cost of it and watch carefully the direct results. If the latter are forthcoming, it is worth while, but from every other standpoint it is useless, as the newspapers are absolutely indifferent to the musical welfare of the local musician, vastly preferring to give their reading space—sometimes gratuitously—to foreigners, some of whom in a single "season" make more in America than does the president of the United States in a year.

Mame was that wroth that she might have gone on and said something real sassy if the orchestra hadn't just then struck up "Down in Dear Old New Orleans." She was quick to respond when Ed said: "Come on, dear lady, let's get as much out a this as we can before the council puts the go in the tango."

Stewart.—Mr. Cameron Stewart was heard in "Celeste Aida" in a private musicale recently and his voice was found to be in excellent condition.

He has great range and power and the quality of his voice is beautiful at every point. If he should enter more actively into the concert field of Chicago he would certainly very soon become a great favorite.

MELBA MAY FRENCH

Some newspaper comment on the work of Melba Mae French, a very charming young entertainer, is as follows:

Rev. Z. E. Bates, pastor Church of Christ, Bowling Green, Ohio: The Melba Mae French Concert Company gave their entertainment to a good audience last night. We were all delighted with their work.

Miss Katherine Graham, general secretary Y. W. C. A., Aurora Ill.: Permit me to say that the members and friends of the Young Woman's Christian Association listened with great pleasure to a most delightful program given by the Melba Mae French Concert Company last evening. Miss French has truly the musical soul and she, with the assistance of her mother, gave us a fine musical treat.

H. C. Brown of the Masonic Lodge, Wolcottville, Ind.: The entertainment given by the Melba Mae French Concert Company was certainly great. The Frenches certainly know how to entertain.

The Mirror, New Paris, Ohio: The Melba Mae French Concert Company's program furnished one of the most enjoyable evenings of recent years. Each entertainer proved a whole show in herself.

Professor F. J. Kimball, superintendent of schools, Deshler, Ohio: Both Mrs. French and her daughter, Melba Mae, are cultured and talented. We were certainly well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. J. B. Stokes, president Needle Workers, Methodist Episcopal Church, Elkhorn, Wis.: We were very much pleased with the concert given last night by the French Concert Company and want them again. (Advertisement.)

North Shore.—The North Shore School of Music at Evanston and Leland avenues, presented Irene Agnes Thomure in a program of readings last evening, being assisted by Ruth Goodsmith, Charles J. Haake, Rosalind Munn, Ruth Rudolph, Electa Austin and Gail Martin-Haake in two-piano selections.

Kimbell.—Grant Kimbell sent greetings to Music News from Covington, Ohio, where he appeared last week in Chautauqua engagement.

CANADA'S GREATEST MUSICIAN

Music News takes pleasure in presenting on its front page the likeness of R. Octave Pelletier of Montreal, Canada, for more than fifty-five years past the organist of St. James' Cathedral, and one of those few who have had greatly to do with the making of American musical history.

Mr. Pelletier is a Canadian of French and German descent and was born in Montreal in 1844. Much of his early musical education was acquired through his own efforts; in fact, he was practically self-taught. Later he went to Europe, studying in France, England and Italy. Upon his return M. Pelletier was appointed to the position of organist of the Catholic Cathedral, which post he continues to fill with great distinction. In 1868 Mr. Pelletier made a tour in New England, as pianist, in company with the celebrated English organist, G. W. Morgan. Later he located in Hartford, Conn., where he was associated with Dudley Buck, the two becoming inseparable friends, spending many hours discussing musical and literary matters. In 1870 he returned to Montreal for permanent residence, and there he has had every honor that could be accorded a musician. Shortly after coming to Montreal he published the famous accompaniment of Gregorian Chants used in the Catholic church, marking a revolution in this line and demonstrating conclusively that this musical form could be clothed in the most elaborate harmony without destroying its peculiar character. This harmonization of plain chant has been imitated since, but never improved upon.

This Canadian master is likewise noted for his wonderful improvisations on the organ and has compelled the admiration of every visitor to the cathedral who has heard him on the wonderful instrument there. Indeed, he is able to take a small fragment of a composition and extemporize on it in an inexhaustible and elaborate manner and in such a way that his hearers frequently mistake it for a printed composition.

Mr. Pelletier has also been known particularly as a piano pedagogue, since many years ago when he first made known to Canadian music lovers the beauties of Chopin, Mendelssohn, etc., which were at that time absolute novelties in America. In the early days, and down through the many succeeding years, pupils flocked to his studio to learn to interpret the classic and more modern composers; in fact, those musicians in and near Montreal are in the small minority who have not at some time been pupils of Mr. Pelletier. Jessie Caverhill Cameron is one of the youngest of his successful pupils, having gained from this teacher her entire musical education, with perhaps the exception of a year. However, is is to him that she attributes her success.

Among other positions filled by him are that of dean of McGill University, Montreal; vice president of Dominion College of Music, Montreal; second vice president Academie de Musique, Quebec.

Two sons of the family are following in the father's footsteps, both having achieved much in music as a profession. The eldest is a composer and critic of note as well as being choirmaster at St. James' Cathedral. Another is organist and choirmaster in the Catholic church of West Mount, Montreal's most exclusive ward.

However, those who know R. Octave Pelletier intimately, realize him to be a man of great modesty, too retiring to thrust himself into such limelight as might have been in keeping with his attainments; all honors accorded him have been unsought. Indeed, it has been for musical progress in American rather than for himself that his efforts have been given.

THEODORA STURKOW-RYDER

Theodora Sturkow-Ryder announces many recitals for the coming season, beginning her concerts with a big one in Pittsburgh, October 9. Then she is to play in Minneapolis November 6, and for the Singers' Club in Cleveland, December 4. This will be the fifth time she has appeared at the Bellevue concerts in Pittsburgh, she being a great favorite there. In January Mme. Sturkow-Ryder will be in the far west, returning in February to fill some dates near Chicago.

In motoring with Madame Sturkow-Ryder through Lincoln Park (Chicago) the other day, we were near the flowers when she said. "Oh, do let me get out here, and look at my Beethoven statue. You know I unveiled this, when I was the favorite pupil of Carl Wolfsohn, and he presented this statue to the city of Chicago, and I'm very proud of the honor. I always come to see it as often as I can. Mr. Gelert, the sculptor, was a very good friend of mine, and used to let me wander about in his studio and see all of his work, and it gave me a wonderful deal of pleasure to watch those great figures grow. I was always crazy about painting and sculpture, and wanted to study both."

GERTRUDE V. O'HANLON NOTES

Hanna Butler, soprano, filled a very successful week's engagement in Minneapolis last week, appearing with the Nelson Orchestra. The date was secured by Miss O'Hanlon.

Hans Schroeder, baritone, has been engaged by Gertrude V. O'Hanlon for her Metropolitan Grand Opera Quartet.

Gertrude V. O'Hanlon was last week in Minneapolis and St. Paul booking her artists. She will be in Des Moines, Ia., the first part of next week. Miss O'Hanlon will be back in Chicago at the end of the month.

Beutel.—Carl Beutel has resigned his position at the Indianpolis Conservatory and after a vacation period at Detroit will take up a position at the Texas Christian University, at Fort Worth, Tex.

OTTAWA, ILL.

The following report of the La Salle County Music Teachers' Association recent meeting is taken from the Streator Press:

A meeting of the La Salle County Music Teachers' Association was held yesterday afternoon and evening at Library Hall, Ottawa. This organization was formed in November, 1912, for the purpose of affording mutual benefit to the music teachers of the county, and to co-operate with the State Teachers' Association.

At the afternoon session the program consisted of the president's address, by the gracious presiding officer, Mrs. W. C. Paisley, who is well and favorably known in Streator. Also papers on "The Necessity of All Music Teachers Understanding Harmony," by Miss Mary Montgomery of Marseilles; "The Business Side of Music Teaching," by Miss Caecilia Castelli of Streator, and "The Development of the Orchestra," by John Hoff of Ottawa.

The musical numbers were very well rendered and consisted of songs by Miss Jennie La Du, piano solo by Miss Estella Miller and violin solo by Miss Carrie Lewis of Grand Ridge.

Miss Castelli, one of our young piano teachers, is secretary of the county association and was Streator's only representative on the program, so we are delighted to learn that her paper was very highly spoken of by the teachers, who pronounced it excellent.

EVENING SESSION

The evening session was devoted to a concert by representative music teachers and a few students of Ottawa, with the exception of Miss Castelli of Streator. The well arranged program consisted of an excellent piano duet by the Misses Malcolm and Damm, very pleasing vocal numbers by John Hoff, Miss Rebecca Yentzer and Miss Chamberlain; delightful violin selections by Miss Katherine Lincoln, and piano numbers by Mr. Willard Smith. From such an enjoyable group of selections it is unfair to select any for especial mention, but the work of Miss Chamberlain, who is so well known in Streator, having assisted the Opera Club in the May Festival, was so unusually good as to deserve mention. The most interesting number was perhaps the illustrated description of the opera "Thais" by Massenet, which was so cleverly presented by Mr. Willard Smith, a pianist of unusual merit, as to receive much commendation.

The audience taxed the capacity of Library Hall and was a most enthusiastic and appreciative one, and were very generous in the reception given Miss Castelli, who played the "Gigue Brettonne" by Bachmann, and after hearty applause gave for an encore, "Murmuring Zephyrs" by Jensen.

A number of music-loving people of Streator and vicinity were in attendance and on the whole the event proved very interesting and enjoyable.

MARIE STAPLETON MURRAY

Mrs. Murray went to Chautauqua, N. Y., for a vacation on Saturday of last week, and arrived just in time to be offered and to accept the position of soprano for the remainder of the month, Miss Eva Emmet Wycoff, who has been singing, being compelled to give up the work because of indisposition.

Mrs. Murray was out on the lake, with her husband fishing, when a messenger came from Mr. Hallem asking her to come at once to final rehearsal. She changed boats in mid-lake, hurried to the rehearsal and that night in "Messiah" scored a complete success, as may be judged from the enclosed clipping from the Chautauqua Daily:

The soloists appeared to more advantage in this than in anything they have done so far. Mrs. Marie Stapleton Murray substituted for the soprano, Miss Wycoff, who was indisposed, and though Mrs. Murray had not sung the "Messiah" for some time, she showed absolute familiarity with the work and sang superbly. She is a decided chautauqua favorite and it was a delight to hear again her beautifully rounded voice, fresh and vibrant and under such good control. The florid passages of "Rejoice Greatly" were as limpid and spontaneous as the rippling of a mountain stream and in "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth" she sang with rare sympathy, introducing the phrase "And Though Worms Destroy This Body" with thrilling fervor.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK AT OCEAN GROVE

The Schumann-Heink concert given in Ocean Grove on Monday evening last was declared to be the greatest public tribute ever accorded an artist at the popular Jersey resort. Nearly 10,000 people packed the huge auditorium, while as many more stood on the outside listening to the occasional tones which penetrated the darkness through the open doors and windows.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK

On the first entrance of the famous contralto to the platform she was greeted with a mixed ovation of loud cheers and hand-clapping and the usual Chautauqua salute, the waving of handkerchiefs. This was repeated after each program number throughout the entire evening, but the climax was reached after the conclusion of the concert and when Madame started for her hotel, nearly a block away. Extending from the rear entrance of the hall to the hotel steps were two solid walls of humanity through which she was compelled to walk when the demonstration was renewed, only in louder tones, winding up with a burst of cheers surpassing everything in point of noise ever heard within the gates of the camp meeting city, when Madame Schumann-Heink, in a few words, from the veranda of the hotel, expressed her appreciation of the tribute.

This was the beginning of Madame Schumann-Heink's limited tour of engagements at chautauquas and summer schools in the east and middle west. With William J. Bryan she is the star feature of the summer school at Winona Lake, Ind., where she will sing on August 5. Other chautauqua engagaments are at Cedar Lake, Ia.; Bay View, Mich.; Waseca, Minn., and the Monteagle Assembly, Monteagle, Tenn., where she wil wind up her tour.

At the concert on Monday night all society along the Jersey shore was represented. Before the opening of the concert more than three hundred automobiles had passed through the entrance gates, bringing large parties all the way from Atlantic Highlands to Point Pleasant. Governor Fielder of New Jersey and his staff were among the audience.

Nichols.—Mr. and Mrs. John W. Nichols are already booking engagements for the coming season. They have just been secured by the Dana Musical Institute of Warren, Ohio, for a joint piano and vocal recital next February. Mr. Nichols is booking a number of "Messiah" performances around Christmas time. He has been having most flattering success at Chautauqua this summer.

OAK PARK, ILL.

A splendid new Casacant organ is being installed at the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, where Carl D. Kinsey is organist and director. Clarence S. Funk is chairman of the building committee:

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

There is no magic in speed. Quick action requires only quick thought.

Every great artistic technic is automatic—not mechanical; but it becomes automatic only after it has been mechanical.

Everything that pertains to intellect in piano playing may be acquired by intellect plus perseverance. The expressions of the soul, however, are innate, individual and personal.

Pianoforte instruction, even of the highest type, can not make a student creative or original. It can, at best, but awaken the latent.

There is no one and only corect way of playing the piano artistically; not method, but methods.

The pianoforte is a machine; but more than this, it is a musical instrument of stupendous possibilities and compelling powers.

The pedals—especially the damper pedal—are the very soul of the piano. Do not "run" them like a sewing machine. Furthermore, do not "hug" them like a sweetheart.

You get out of the piano exactly what you put into it. Strive to play intelligently, with forethought plus intuition and your playing will be interesting and artistic.

In legitimate piano playing, hearing is believing.

Sincerity is the only true basis of high class piano playing. Only in this manner can feeling convince.

Piano playing is effective only in proportion to its suggestibility.

The Well Tempered Clavichord is the pianist's bible. He should know it "by heart."

Piano playing is a remarkably reliable index to character, temperament and mentality—or the lack of these.

Every piano player is not a pianist.

To play or not to play—that is the question often. When in doubt—don't.

Don't practice octaves—PLAY them.

The final criterion of piano playing—if it sounds well, it is good.

AMERICAN GUILD OF ORGANISTS

The following letter was received some weeks ago, but is still of much interest.—Ed. Music News.

Dear Sir:—The committee on "Uniformity of Console" has reported to the Council.

It is proposed by that body to appoint a special meeting for the purpose of discussing the details connected with the subject, in order that the guild at large may have a voice in determining what shall be recommended to the builders. It is hoped that this question can be settled, as far as possible, before the summer vacation.

There are many points which can never be definitely determined. Upon these discussion is useless. If we can get the wisest measurements, and a general fixed outline of design, it is about all that can be hoped for.

The committee, in studying the matter, has found more difficulties in the way than it had supposed.

Suggestions are desired before a vote is finally taken.

Do not discuss minor details. We can only fix upon points which are deemed essential. It must be understood that we cannot reply to letters, or enter into any personal discussion of the subject. The reason is obvious. We want to get your ideas in order to weigh them, with others, and decide with the will of the majority.

We shall endeavor to present our final report with an unbiased judgment, and to recommend what we think will be for the greatest good of those coming after us, not considering habits brought about by long usage of systems in vogue.

(Signed)

SAMUEL A. BALDWIN,
CLIFFORD DEMAREST,
J. WARREN ANDREWS, Chairman.

Following is the report:

Console Measurements of Former Committee

1. Pedal board to be placed in central position. Suggest that middle D of pedal be placed directly under middle C of manual.

2. The vertical distance of the manuals from the pedals, measured from the middle pedal white key to the surface of the white key of the lowest manual, shall be 29½ inches.

3. The tip of the black pedal key should be 8½ inches (minimum) to 10½ inches

(maximum) back of a plumb-line dropped from the top of the lowest manual white key. Suggest that pedal keys be a uniform distance of 2½ inches apart, measured from center to center at the inner end of the natural keys. As the board will probably be concave and radiating, it is further suggested that the 32-note board measure at the end nearest the desk, outside to outside, 52 inches, and at the back, outside to outside, 40 inches. Length of pedal keys, inside to inside of frame, 30 inches. This will determine the radius. Concavity, 2½ inches from a straight line drawn across the board at the desk end of the natural keys.

Expression Pedals

The Sw. Ped. should be placed opposite the gap between E flat and F sharp. The Ch. Ped. to the left of the Sw., and the solo to the right. The Cresc. Ped. to the right, but a little removed from the solo, or the pedal placed next to it. Expression pedals to be placed as near the pedal board as possible, without interfering with the pedal keys.

Distance of manuals from each other, rise 2 3-8 inches. Four-inch overhang.

The guild advises that, wherever possible, an extra octave of pipes shall be placed above the highest manual note of the 16, 8 and 4-foot pipes, so as to make the super octave couplers sound throughout the compass of the keyboard.

The Sw. and Ped. drawstop knobs shall always be placed on the left of the manuals; the Gt. and Ch. knobs at the right.

That provision be made to shut off any part of the organ at the console in case of cypher.

Further Suggestions by the Present Committee

The organ seat shall have a uniform height of 19½ inches from the top of middle C in the pedal to the top of the seat; that it shall be furnished with a set of doweled strips to put under the base whenever it becomes necessary to raise the height. This will make the seat adjustable and firm at the same time. A place could easily be made under the seat to accommodate the spare strips used in adjusting.

Sfz. Ped. to be placed at the right of the expression pedals. The reversible coupler pedals to the left of them.

The Cresc. Ped to be made adjustable, arranged so that the organist may put registers on or off, or limit its scope.

The committee unanimously favors stop-knobs in preference to stop-keys, except as to couplers, which they suggest placing over the upper manual in the following order, reading from left to right: Pedal, manual, subs and supers, double spacing between the groups. keys or "dominoes" to be used. The black and white key arrangement is, it seems to the committee, open to objections as, in touching a black key to put a stop in, the finger is liable to touch the white key on leaving the black, thus drawing the stop on again by accident. Besides this, this form is not as convenient as the keys under which the player can get his fingers in order to cancel.

Should the guild decide to favor the stop-key arrangement in lieu of stop-knobs, or leave the choice optional, the committee would suggest a uniform position over the upper manual, corresponding to that described for the stops on the right and left of the manuals, viz. (reading from left to right): Pedal, swell, great, choir, solo, echo. All couplers to be placed in line together over the stop-keys in the above described order and not mixed in with the speaking registers.

There should be a positive order of crescendo in all fixed combination pedals and pistons. It is proposed that we begin with the piano combinations from the left, working towards the right as we proceed with our crescendos. The haphazard way of leaving this to chance is the cause of much confusion to the player. There should also be a fixed direction for moving pedals that latch. Shall they latch towards the center or outwards from it? Let us get a ruling in the guild.

Your committee believes that pistons are preferable to pedals, where but one can be used. These should not be spread out too far to the right, but grouped near the center, or to the left of it, and under the manuals upon which they operate. If keys are used they are best over the manuals on which they operate. We would suggest that pistons do not stick out over half an inch.

It is recommended that the dip of the keys be made uniformly 7-16 of an inch, and that the weight of the touch be made five ounces.

Your committee is unanimous in favoring the system of combination action whereby the stops shall not move when the piston is pressed in. If it is possible to make a system so that either may be used by the organist at will, we should favor it. Every member of the committee has in times past been opposed to this system, and all have become firmly convinced by its compulsory use that it is superior to the old way. None of us could be convinced, until compelled by force of circumstance to use it, that it is the best system of combination action yet devised. It is not perfect, but we believe it has many points of superiority over the old system. Of course the adoption of a system of this kind naturally implies the casting aside of many preconceived notions of registration. This is where the difficulty arises in considering it.

It is further recommended that the guild, after settling these points, have a drawing made of the suggested design and measurements, together with the recommendations, and have them printed for the benefit of all builders and committees who may desire them. If we are to have uniformity in any degree we should be able to supply our measurements and suggestions immediately upon application.

J WARREN ANDREWS,
Chairman.
4 West Seventy-sixth Street, New York.

Henry.—Harold Henry will remain in Chicago until the second week of August, when he goes to New Hampshire to appear at the MacDowell festival, playing the MacDowell pianoforte, "Concerto." After this he will go on a walking trip through Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts. Mr. Henry has already many bookings for his coming season, which will probably open with a recital in New York City.

LEMUEL KILBY, the Young Chicago Bass-Baritone, is making a very successful Chautauqua Tour this summer, as may be judged from the following Press Notices of his work:

Lemuel W. Kilby, the bass-baritone of the quartet, has tones beautifully modulated, smooth and full of feeling. His enunciation is good, and his songs were a pleasure to every one—Idaho Statesman, June 19, 1913.

"MESSIAH" PERFORMANCE.

Mr. Kilby, the bass, was in excellent voice, the powerful sonority of his voice was specially admired.—Idaho Statesman, June 20, 1913.

Mr. Kilby's work was artistic throughout. His beautiful baritone voice which is at all times under perfect control, together with his perfect enunciation, was a delight from first to last. —Evening Capital News, Boise, June 21, 1913.

Lemuel W. Kilby, basso, has a rich and beautiful voice and is one of the leading singers of the west, pleasing his audience wherever he has appeared.—Albany Evening Herald, Albany, Ore., July 15, 1913.

The Brahms Quartet demonstrated last night that its reputation has been honestly earned. Every member of the four is an artist, and in the selections as much genius is shown as in the singing of them. In solos, duets and quartets the members sang the old favorites and the newer pieces which base their charm on melody and sentiment.—Nevada State Journal, Reno, June 15, 1913.

Boise citizens and visitors in the city were delighted with the concert given by the Brahms Quartet. A varied program was rendered which pleased all classes and the talented singers won themselves into the hearts of the Boise people at their first performance.

Each of the members of the quartet received liberal applause in their separate parts, while the blending of the voices was perfect. The rendition of the numbers brought out the real quality of the tones of the singers and marked them as masters of the world of song.—Evening Capital News, Boise, June 19, 1913.

Music lovers who heard the Brahms this afternoon realize the fact that a great quartet is now in this city. Four treats are all the Brahms will afford the Humboldt chautauqua. Those who miss will only regret.—Eureka Herald, Eastern California, June 28, 1913.

Perhaps it would not be putting it too strongly to say that the Brahms Quartet of Chicago, noted as one of the most famous musical organizations in the United States, created a furore yesterday afternoon when the singers made their initial bow to Humboldters.

One of the largest audiences that has filled the auditorium since the chautauqua opened listened appreciatively to every number, and made manifest in the very air the fact that the singers would have conferred a favor had they continued with extra numbers.—Humboldt Times, Eureka, June 29, 1913.

Seldom does Eureka have the opportunity of hearing such music as was heard by those who attended the Chautauqua last evening. From the first until the closing number the audience sat entranced. Many a favorite was heard, including solos, duets, and trios in every possible voice combination.—Eureka Standard, June 30, 1913.

The prelude rendered by the quartet this afternoon was one of the best musical features presented during the assembly this year.—Albany Evening Herald, Albany, Ore., July 15, 1913.

The auditorium at the chautauqua grounds was well filled last evening to hear the concert given by the famous Brahms Quartet of Chicago. That every number on the program was appreciated was indicated by the enthusiastic manner in which each of the singers was received.—July 16, 1913.

FRANKLIN HOPKINS

Perhaps the most extensive collection of musical settings to the poetry of the foremost English poets, dating back to the Elizabethan age, is the lately published "Great English Poets Series" album of thirty songs, by Franklin Hopkins, composer of the Modern Poets album and Keats and Shakespeare albums of songs. There is great variety represented in this large volume, and although a careful perusal would indicate that Mr. Hopkins has not achieved individuality in his work, the diverse demands of the widely varying poems used and the evident purpose to make the music adapted to the words is the probable reason. The settings, however, possess points of similarity that show Mr. Hopkins to be a student of harmony with a particular relation to musical form. The solidarity of the song framework is noticeable in nearly every case, and the utmost simplicity apparent in many of these lyrics. In Milton's "L'Allegro," nevertheless, the most ambitious and longest, a very complex form of harmonic progression is employed, and it would seem as though the composer had tried to translate quite literally into music the famous lines, "The melting voice through mazes running, Untwisting all the chains that tie the hidden soul of harmony; That Orpheus' self may heave his head from golden slumber, on a bed of heaped elysian flowers." The characteristics of Mr. Hopkins' work are directness, simplicity, freedom from pianistic or vocalistic virtuosity, and always a strict adherence to form and to direct melodic appeal. The effects may appear somewhat old-fashioned, but it is clear that there is no evidence whatever that Mr. Hopkins has anything else in mind outside of an assiduous and studied endeavor to give an Anglo-Saxon flavor to Anglo-Saxon words. The public has been clamoring for English songs, and with such ma-

Recent Press Comment

A small but appreciative audience greeted Mlle. Sofia Stephali last night when she appeared in the first of her series of three concert lectures. Her subject: "The Influence of Music," proved to be an interesting as well as a most instructive one and the concert lecture was greatly enjoyed by all who had the pleasure of attending it.—Lawrence (Mass.) Daily Eagle.

Charming Lecture Concert Given—Evening One of Rare Pleasure for Lovers of Music.—An audience that tested the seating capacity of Journal Hall last evening with Sofia Stephali, who gave a popular concert lecture on "The Influence of Music." Never, perhaps, have Meriden people been permitted to enjoy so charming an atmosphere of refined music as that which the lecturer and singer introduced.

The concert lecture was given under the auspices of the National Society for Broader Education of New York, which co-operated with the Meriden Humane Society to make it possible in this city. The splendid audience of last night, and the many season tickets sold, demonstrated beyond question that the character of the concerts was entirely familiar to the music lovers of Meriden. That the concerts to be given this afternoon and tonight will be even more largely patronized is a foregone conclusion.

Sofia Stephali is a fascinating lecturer and a delightful singer. It was a joy and a privilege to be present and hear the excerpts from the songs of the noted composers.—Meriden (Conn.) Morning Record.

The program was most thoroughly enjoyed by those in attendance, and her well rounded voice was heard to an excellent advantage in the several selections which she rendered.

The program was opened with selections from "Tannhauser" March, played by Miss Bernice Lathrop, a talented young pianist, who also accompanied Mme. Stephali in a manner that added to the effectiveness of the numbers.

Mme. Stephali is a lecturer of no mean ability and gave a very entertaining discourse on the topic upon which she spoke.—Bangor (Me.) Daily Commercial.

The lecturer was very generous in giving illustrative selections out of her extensive repertory, and the audience was delighted with the gaiety and brilliance of her expression and tone. Her voice is of great range and she manages it with exquisite skill whether she is interpreting a heavy operatic selection by Meyerbeer or a dazzling little song like "Sunbeams" (Ronald.) Sofia Stephali was assisted at the piano by Bereniece Lathrop, who in addition to playing the accompaniments sympathetically gave a pleasing rendering of Liszt's setting to the "Pilgrim's March" from "Tannhauser."—Ottawa (Can.) The Citizen.

terial singers should be able more and more to satisfy this desire legitimately. Some of the most striking numbers in the album, with the poet represented, are as follows: "Her glance was the best of the rays," Byron; "Lord of Burleigh," "Ever Varying Madeline," Tennyson; "She was a phantom of delight," Wordsworth; "From Comus," Milton; "One word is too often profaned," "The Indian Serenade," Shelley. In this album Thomas Moore seems to be the favorite, with six numbers: "At the mid hour of night," "Love hath echoes truer far," "Sweet evening bells," "The light that lies in woman's eyes," "Then fare thee well," "Whene'er I see those smiling eyes." Browning, Mrs. Browning, Swineburne, Scott, Kingsley, Johnson, Sidney, Samuel Lover, Chorley, and Edwin Arnold also figure. The album is bound in purple and gold, and is marked $3. It is published by Cecil Mackie, Inc., New York.

LOUISE BURTON

The Chicago press recently commented as follows on the work of Miss Burton:

Miss Burton has personality. She is musical. She has the capacity to respond to a message of beauty and the gift to communicate that response to others. Her voice has great possibilities, its native quality suggesting Mme. Carolina White's splendidly resonant tone.—Chicago Tribune.

Miss Burton's voice is of naturally beautiful tone and of good range, and the agility of her coloratura work made pleasant record. The Italian classics were the media of beautiful effects, while the lieder gave proof of true poetic insight into the emotional significance of the text.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Miss Burton's opening number indicated her fine control, the difficult trills in it being given with security and grace. . . . . Her audience seemed most impressed by "Schatzelein," a song by Reger, which requires the elasticity of voice and happy mood which the singer brought to it, to make it effective.—Chicago Post.

Miss Burton's voice revealed an unsuspected volume and compass, the rich, resonant timbre of the middle register being particularly effective. She sang with evenness and beauty of tone and charm of phrasing. The Puccini aria was given with fascinating rhythm, and indicated keen dramatic instinct.—Musical Leader. (Advertisement.)

ALICE R. DEAL

Miss Alice R. Deal, organist of Leavitt Street Congregational Church, and secretary of Illinois Chapter of A. G. O., will leave Sunday evening, August 3, for an eastern trip, stopping at Niagara Falls, Albany, New York, Boston and Ogunquit, Maine, returning home Saturday, August twenty-three.

Miss Deal will also attend the convention of the N. A. O. at Ocean Grove, N. J.

BRAHMS QUARTET

The following comment is from the Humboldt (Cal.) Times:

The advent of the Brahms Quartet will go down in the musical history of this city (Eureka, Cal.) The singers, all of them connected with various Chicago churches, are four artists who make up a splendidly balanced quartet, whose work is greatly supplemented by a pianist of exceptional ability. They are absolutely cultivated singers, whose voices blend beautifully; whose enunciation is perfect and who sing with exceptional taste. (Advertisement.)

Cooper.—Mrs. Fannie Fox Cooper, long known as one of the most thorough and successful teachers of piano in Chicago, has gone to Pasadena, Cal., where she will take up her professional work after a long vacation.

Stauffer.—Paul Clarke Stauffer presented his pupil, Gertrude Sheflan, at his Green Gables studio in Denver on Monday evening. She was assisted by Jennie Henderson, contralto, and Gertrude Bunger, violinist.

Music in America

WORCESTER, MASS

The Y. M. C. A. has organized a brass band and given it the name, "Y. M. C. A. Brass Band." The bandmaster is Charles R. Fish.. Jr., and the first concert was given recently at the Y. M. C A. boat house near Lake Quinsigamond, and drew an interested audience, which was pleased with the music given.

As this is a departure, along musical lines, of the association, the personnel and instrumentation is recorded: First cornets. John L. Donovan; E. C. Gilman; second cornets, Ernest Jackman, S. M. Sanford; third cornets, Archie Chapman, S. K. Milliken; first clarinets, Arthur K. Green, Joseph A. Valva; second clarinets, Albert Blanchard, George S. Eager; piccolo and flute, Harry T. Gray; baritone, treble clef. Arthur Geldard; baritone, bass clef, Carl Johnson; first alto, Elmer J. Wright, second alto, Paul Sterck; third alto. William Eddy; solo trombone, Herman de Anguera; second trombone, Robert Twist; third trombone, William Schmidt; double bass tuba, B. F. Ritter; first tenor, Stephen Williamson; drums, snare. J. J. Gleason, bass drum, John Der Wallis.

The orchestra, which did such satisfactory work under C. A. Whitcomb's baton, last year, will be reassembled in the fall, and plans for a glee club are being made by the director of the educational department, Robert L. Moore. who will probably be the leader of the club.

The Steinert Series of Concerts

The Steinert Music House, through its local manager, Stanley C. Brennan, has arranged program, dates and the personnel for its series of four concerts which will be given in Mechanics' Hall, October 26, November 9. November 23, December 7. The first concert will have for artists, Mme. Maud Powell, violinist, the Hungarian pianist, Mme. Yolanda Mero, and Miss Harriot Barrows, soprano. Mme. Inez Barbour, soprano; Mme. Nevada van der Veer. (Mrs. Reed Miller) contralto; Evan Williams, tenor, and Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, will give the second program consisting of miscellaneous numbers and the "Persian Garden," by Liza Lehmann. At the third concert Mme. Johanna Gadski, Wagnerian soprano, George Harris, Jr., tenor; Miss Marie Caslova, violinist; Edwin Schneider, accompanist, are to appear. The fourth concert will be given by Mme. Marie Rappold, soprano from the Metropolitan Opera Company; Herbert Witherspoon, basso from the same company, and Felix Fox, pianist.

Worcester Theater Next Season

The work of repair and rejuvenation of the Worcester Theater is progressing rapidly, and the coming season will open near the end of August. Manager Burke is planning to put on the heavy plays the first part of each week, and run lighter works of the popular variety, the last part. Last season the management gave Worcester the opportunity to hear several high-class concerts, notably Slazak, the tenor; Mme. Calve and company; Mme. Scotney, Howard White, and other members of the Boston Opera Company.

Personal Mention

At a meeting for members only, of the Millbury Grange, Friday night, July 18, a program of music and reading was given, and each member carried eight ounces of candy, cake. or other toothsome edible, with which to beguile the time after the formal entertainment had ended.

Miss Cora F. Woodbury, mezzo soprano, sang Bishop's "Tell Me My Heart," "Meditation," Borch; "The Flower May Hide Its Lovely Face," Osgood; "Ecstasy," H. H. A. Beach. Mrs. Frank Simmons sat at the piano. There were readings by Miss Cora Searles, and a piano solo by Miss Henrietta Davidson.

Stephen Ezra Rich. tenor, sang at a recital of the piano pupils of Miss Grace Florence Bacon, his first teacher on piano, at Ware, Mass., late last month.

His songs were "A Perfect Day," Carrie J. Bond; "Ecstasy," Beach, and several of the "Nonsense Songs" of Margaret Ruthven Lange.

The pupils appearing at this recital were Fannie Barton Hunt, who played Tandelei, Behr, Op. 575, No. 3; Oriana Grace Sests, whose number was Sonatine, Beethoven, Op. 49, No. 2; Ada Merrill Hunt, who gave d'Etude. Wollenhaupt, Op. No. 1. Thomas James White played "Silver Stars," Bohm; Susan Elizabeth Marsh entertained with the Fifth Nocturne, J. Leybach, Op. 52; Sylvia Sestella Lester was heard in a march and a waltz by Czerny, and Elsie White closed the recital with the Graziosa March, by Eilenberg, Op. 67.

Fred W. Bailey, director and organist at Piedmont church, and the originator of the Worcester Virgil pianoforte school, Miss Grace B. Davis being a principal teacher, is planning monthly recitals in the school next year, with a final recital in the spring.

GARY CHAUTAUQUA

The Redpath Bureau in managing the Gary Chautauqua last week sent musicians of such splendid attainments, for the most part, that Music News is happy to comment upon the several musical programs featured.

Tuesday evening, with a capacity house in attendance, the members of the David Dunbar Opera Company presented Parelli's "Lovers' Quarrel" in a manner highly gratifying to the audience. Given almost wholly without scenery, after the fashion of the Ben Greet players, and with the sole accompaniment on the piano, the result was, nevertheless, pleasing in the extreme.

On the whole, a quartet of finer parts than Mabel Sherwood Cox, soprano; Esther Munstermann, contralto; David Dunbar, tenor, and Hugh Anderson, basso, are not presented by the Redpath Lyceum Bureau at any time. Isaac Van Grove at the piano formed an addition absolutely invaluable to the success of the company.

While allowances may easily be made a company of singers playing its one hundred and twelfth consecutive performance, little need to do so is required in this instance. However, Miss Cox, whose voice is of a most excellent quality and a range not ordinary, appeared to show traces of the strain of too numerous performances. This particularly affected her intonation. Miss Munstermann, a contralto whose voice is most rare in its decidedly rich quality, and whose musicianship is quite in keeping, was given an ovation at each of her two appearances—in afternoon and evening. Of David Dunbar the Gary Evening Post says: "David Dunbar might be written in red headlines, but only on account of the inconvenience of the thing it isn't. As a tenor he is superb, both as regards voice and the elegance and completeness of his art. Nothing more satisfying than his interpretation of the lover, Florindo, is easily imagined. His voice has power and pliability and the manner in which he uses it bespeaks a musical intelligence far from usual. Mr. Dunbar is a superior artist."

Mr. Anderson, whose superb voice and excellent operatic style are known throughout the country particularly distinguished himself at this time and drew enthusiastic response from his audience.

Isaac Van Grove was given the highly difficult part of substituting for a life-sized orchestra, and did it with colors flying. A technical equipment far and away beyond the ordinary, and the natural gift of accompanying approaching the ideal, were brought into use effectively by Mr. Van Grove. With good solo work throughout and a fine ensemble, the entire production was one highly creditable.

DAVID DUNBAR OPERA COMPANY

The second part of the evening's program consisted of a number of solos and two quartet numbers. Featuring here was the "Sextet" from "Lucia," arranged for quartet and given with fine effect, the excellence of the ensemble being particularly commendable. The "Barcarolle" from "Contes d'Hofmann" (Offenbach) was also given a clever reading.

Kryl's Band

Another musical program of the several, quite worthy of space here, was that afforded by Bohumir Kryl's famous band. Forty pieces of the organization, under Mr. Kryl's own direction, and with a corps of soloists not to be surpassed, were taken to Gary to put on the two appearances of afternoon and evening, Saturday. More than five thousand persons assembled to hear what proved to be the finest organization of its kind ever appearing in that city since its birth six years ago.

The afternoon program follows:

Overture to "Mignon" ..... Thomas
"Cleopatra" ..... Demare
Xylophone solo, James Hurt
Second Hungarian Rhapsody ..... Lisz'
Caprice, "Hunter's Dream" ..... Bucalossi
INTERMISSION
Humoresque ..... Sousa
Harrisonian (Fantasia for Cornet) ..... Kryl
Bohumir Kryl
Bacarolle from "Tales of Hoffman" ..... Offenbach
Spring Song ..... Mendelssohn
American Fantasia ..... Victor Herbert

Mr. Kryl was given an ovation for his wonderful cornet playing. All the difficulties of cornet technic, including marvelous "triple-tonguing," were skilfully displayed at his hands. Mr. Kryl invariably conducts without his score.

Another pleasing feature of the program was the appearance of Mr. Harry Brooks, the cornet soloist of the company. His playing of the "Miserere" of "Il Trovatore" was insistently encored.

Mr. Brooks, though still very young, holds the enviable place of soloist in one of the notable bands of the country and has the distinction of being one of the two pupils Mr. Kryl ever consented to instruct. A splendid future is predicted for the young man.

Mr. Kryl introduced several pleasing novelties which were heartily applauded.

Especially interesting on the evening program was the symphonic poem "Les Preludes" (Liszt), and a Weber overture. Also on this occasion was introduced a number of novelties which prove Mr. Kryl's cleverness in arranging a program to appeal to a mixed audience. His idea of dividing the band, stationing part of the players outside the tent and at a distance, while the remainder were on the platform, during the "Echo in the Forest" (Kling), was highly effective and original. Also the Michaelis "Village Blacksmith," introducing the use of anvils and played in absolute darkness, the electric effects of the striking of the irons being spectacular and well done as well.

Sunday afternoon and evening the Mozart Trio appeared, and Monday the musical part of the Chautauqua closed with the concerts by the Barnard Orchestra, which was not heard by the reviewer.

FRANCES BOWSER.

LOS ANGELES

The dearth of musical doings is restful to the active concert-goer. Teachers and students are largely upon their vacations, at the sea, or the mountains, or gone abroad for rest, study, or change of environment. The local clubs, orchestras, concert and dramatic choruses are perfecting their plans and programs for a season full of interest and aesthetic culture. The postlude concert of the Endeavor chorus, drew a good-sized audience and was equally enjoyable as was the prelude to the opening. The aggregation of 1,000 voices is unusual and may remain intact for great occasions and conventions. The acoustics proved so satisfactory that mass chorus work may be greatly encouraged and festivals may become an annual feature.

Mrs. Bertha Lotta Sorensen of Chicago, again favored us with a splendid song recital. Her voice has lost none of its beauty, in some particulars much improved. A good steady and vitalized tone is an improvement, the interpretation and delivery was well defined. She was most heartily called back and gave repeated encores. Her program contained Needham's "In Blossom Time;" Tours' "Your Eyes;" Del Riego's "Happy Song;" Meyerbeer's "Roberto" aria, Whelpley's "Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold;" Tipton's "A Spirit Flower;" Salter's "Come to the Garden, Love;" Mendelssohn's "Hear Ye Israel." Miss Leona Briggs and Mr. Philip Granel, accompanists, gave also several piano solos each, making in all a most delightful musical evening. Dr. Elsie Louise Morris, the mother of Mrs. Sorensen, introduced the artist of the evening.

NEW HAVEN

Music in New Haven, with the exception of some of the churches and the near-shore resorts, is at a standstill. Everyone flocks to the Momoguin to hear Fichtel with his orchestra, and to Lavin Rock to listen to the orchestral concerts while enjoying the delightful breezes which are so refreshing to those who have been working all day indoors.

The choir of Central Church, with the exception of the soprano, are to supply the music at Pine Orchard Church for the rest of the summer. Miss Ruth Muzzy, who has been supplying at the organ in place of Stanley Smith at the United Church, will have charge of the Pine Orchard music. Mr. Smith is having a much-needed rest and enjoying a long vacation.

A pretty new song has just been published, the words of which are by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, adapted to music by Professor William Haesche, entitled "Just You." It had its first rendering at Mrs Wilcox's Sunday afternoon concert, July 20, at her bungalow, Short Beach, Conn. Mrs. Wilcox is very fond of music, playing different instruments. mandolin this past spring while she and Mr. Wilcox were traveling in the Orient are gems of their kind.

MADAME TEALDI.

WICHITA, KANS.

The musical atmosphere here has ranged as high as 106 degrees Fahrenheit. I say "musical" atmosphere, inasmuch as Music News is not a chronicle for heat waves. Owing to the summer conditions little else than a feeble attempt is carried on in music lines. The teachers are preparing their summer exodus, some for a month's rest, others for shorter periods (but abrupt drops) in the cool regions of Colorado. While the music schools are maintaining summer schools, it is a safe prediction that few lessons will be given in August.

There are exceptions of course. Plans of some are: Lucius Ades is conducting the Lyric Glee Club in chautauqua work in the state. Frank A. Power will spend two weeks in Laurence, Kans. Tracy York and Mrs. York spent already a vacation in Oklahoma, and are going to brave August here. M. L. Hull is directing the band concerts by his local organization at the Riverside Park, so will remain here. Otto L. Fischer, pianist, will go east the latter part of August, visiting his parents in New York City. Harry Evans, baritone, of the W. C. of M., will remain here all summer and next year plans to visit his home in England.

Professor Arthur Friedman, who has taught voice in Wichita for many seasons, is removing permanently, going to New York City next month. His colleague, Selma Janson, pianist, who went to Pittsburgh a few seasons ago, has been appointed an instructor in the Pittsburgh Polytechnic School founded by Mr. Carnegie.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Lindberg will motor to Colorado within the month, visiting at Pueblo and Colorado Springs.

Mrs. Reno B. Meyers, teacher of expression in the Power-Meyers Conservatory, is at Manitou, Colo.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Brokaw of the same school are en route in Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri in chautauqua work. Their itinerary leads them to the Ozarks, where they will rest before returning for the opening of the Power-Meyer Conservatory September 2, with which school they have affiliated this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Cahoon, formerly of Wichita and lately of New York City, visited friends here this week. They are en route to the Fort Worth (Texas) Christian University, where they will teach next season.

The Wichita College of Music opens September 11, at which time their regular faculty opening concert will occur.

Mrs. Jetta Campbell-Stanley presented her pupil, Miss Helen Grace, soprano, at St. Paul's Methodist Church, July 21, and notwithstanding the heat of preceding weeks showed excellent results of summer teaching, and past work done under Mrs. Stanley's supervision. The most excellent program appended was heard by an appreciative audience. Her tone production was good, voice placement consequently correct and her interpretations correct. Mrs. Margaret Hammond Campbell was at the piano.

Miss Mable Capron's piano class gave a recital last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Rafael Navas entertained the Musicians' Club July 26, at their home on College Hill.

Old Sol will go south before long, the season will soon open with the fall exposition and its attendant band concerts, and the Wichita chorus will put on its so far greatest course of attractions and the musical doings will be in full swing once more. The musician (?) who wrote "In the Good Old Summer Time" surely couldn't have been a really, truly professional musician or he would have said "Winter" instead.

BROKAW.

PITTSBURGH ORCHESTRA

Carl Bernthaler, conductor of the Pittsburgh Festival Orchestra, which is giving daily evening concerts at the Schenley Lawn, is proving his worth in many ways and the people of Pittsburgh are suddenly awakening to the fact that there is something remarkable in this man's ability as a conductor.

Out of a practically new body of musicians he has obtained results that it takes months, or even years to accomplish, and did he have a greater number of men in hand his orchestra would rank with the great orchestras of the country. Mr. Bernthaler has also delighted his audiences with the selections made for his programs as well as the choice of his soloists.

Wednesday evening Max Shapiro, concertmaster, was heard in a violin solo, playing the difficult "Souvenir de Moscow," by Wieniawski. In his playing of this number he showed absolute control and the highest degree of musical sureness; throughout there lay a velvety richness of tone—a tone full, round and beautiful, where not only technical finesse, but sentiment and mental assertiveness held equal claim. The audience was quick to realize this, and two encores were demanded before it was satisfied—"Humoresque," by Tor Aulin, and "Gavotte," by Gretri.

Thursday evening Mrs. J. Vick O'Brien, assisted by her composer husband, J. Vick O'Brien, was the soloist.

Mrs. O'Brien sang for her number in the first part of the program, "Elsa's Dream," from "Tannhauser," and in the second part, three excerpts from her husband's new grand opera, "Ye Olde Virginia."

Mrs. O'Brien displayed a voice of most unusual quality and fibre. One rarely hears tones of such absolute purity and crystalline purity as this artist possesses. She is mistress also of pianissimo, and is altogether a thoroughly equipped and richly gifted singer.

As a composer, judging from what was heard of Mr. O'Brien's work Friday evening, this young man will very soon gain his due recognition. His opera, such as was heard, is extremely modern with startling orchestra effects. It is full of impetuous rhythms and gracefully twining and climbing melodies. There is also in it the "spirituals" of the negroes, at once palpitantly sensuous and charged with awe-struck, childlike piety, something of a paradox of their strangely mixed emotional nature. Perhaps, should "Ye Olde Virginia" be given in its entirety by one of the various grand opera companies to be launched the coming season it might prove to be the American Grand Opera every one is looking for. Who knows?

(Signed) CATHARINE ELSTON

DEATH OF MRS. WATSON

Music News is very sorry to have to chronicle the death of Mrs. Regina Watson, a musician who has labored in this city for many years and the influence of whose work has been very far-reaching. The following is quoted from the Chicago Tribune:

Mrs. Regina Watson, pianist, died at her residence, 2146 Lincoln parkway, yesterday. She was sixty-seven years old. Mrs. Watson was born in Germany and came to Chicago when ten years old.

She studied music under Liszt and Taussig, and was an intimate friend of Von Buelow and of Madame Teresa Carreno. She was the first to produce "Enoch Arden," with its musical setting, in Chicago, and first set to music Boker's "Countess Laura." She was well known in Chicago society.

Mrs. Watson died following the effects of an operation. Her husband died a year ago and since then, it is said, she lost her interest in life.

Funeral services will take place from her home next Sunday. Interment will be at Rosehill cemetery.

OCEAN GROVE

The convention of the N. A. O. at Ocean Grove opened with a very large attendance on Monday and has been continuing daily with increasing interest. Music News prefers to give its "story" in one installment, and therefore the detail of the meetings is reserved for next week, when they will all be available. Several of the important papers will be printed in full, that of the editor of Music News being given in today's issue.

CONGRATULATIONS AND GOOD WISHES

Music News is in receipt of cards announcing the marriage of L. Douglas Russell, baritone, to Lucille Steers Brand. Congratulations and good wishes are offered.

Detweiler.—Mr. Harry Detweiler of the Columbia Conservatory in Aurora has gone for a month to the Atlantic coast. Mr. Detweiler reports that the summer term at his school has been exceptionally successful and that a splendid class is already booked for the fall term. In addition to conducting the choir at the Congregational Church, Mr. Detweiler has just accepted the position of choirmaster with the First Methodist, which is the largest church in Aurora.

OUR OWN LINE O' SWIPE

The young woman choir director simpered to the man at the church music counter: "The pastor is to preach on 'Matrimony' and wants appropriate music. I can't think of a thing to fit." "That's easy," said the wag. "Best thing possible is 'O Taste and See.'"

A Long Farewell

Fair Worshiper—What is that sad, sad air you're playing, professor?

A Reason for Non-Applause

At one of his recent concerts, Thomas V. Purcell, violinist of the Schubert Symphony Club, noticed a young couple in the third row from the stage who seemed to enjoy every number, but despite the enthusiasm displayed by the rest of the audience they did not applaud any number until the program was almost finished. After playing that exquisite little gem, "Poem," by Fibich, Mr. Purcell heard the young lady whisper to her escort, "John, dear, please let go of my hand a minute; I simply must applaud that last solo."—Bismarck Daily Tribune.

Answers to questions propounded at musical examinations in England, and garnered by the London Musical Herald:

Purcell was the only English composer there ever was.

Palestrina's music is very monotonous and holy. When listened to it makes a man soar above all the evil and dark spots in his character.

"The Messiah" is an anthem, and was written between 1600 and 1700; it was written by Routledge. The "St. Matthew" was written by Chopin in the year 1663.

Composers such as Handel and Bach knew next to nothing about chords and keys.

Beethoven's music is full of accidentals, and if not played with largeness does not sound well.

Con sordino means (a) with sordidness; (b) in a sarcastic manner.

Beethoven was not very great at religious composition, although he harmonized "The Messiah."

Mozart's operas were smooth, while Weber's were all large chords which only he himself could stretch.

Sinfonia Eroica means a heretic.

France was indulging in the amusing and comical opera; but England must have a higher standard, a nobler aim, a better hope.

Handel's operas are light and not stilted as those of Wagner.

Large prices have been payed for Bach's compositions, and also to hear them played. —"The Master Musician."

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERT

The concert at Warren Avenue Congregational Church on last Thursday evening was one in which great variety was offered and when also, the total of pleasure afforded the audience was very great.

Mr. Harry R. Murrison of Alliance, Ohio,

was scheduled for an elaborate program of vocal numbers, but was unfortunately taken ill en route to Chicago and found it impossible to sing his entire program here. He, however, offered two arias and one long group of short works, and certainly pleased the audience to the extreme.

Mr. Murrison has excellent stage address and a most intelligent way of presenting his program and coupled with this is the fact that Mrs. Mabel F. Murrison, his accompanist, has evolved with him, an ensemble which is very exact and very sympathetic, and which certainly proved on Thursday a factor in the success of his work.

The aria "With Joy th' Impatient Husbandman" from Haydn's ever verdant "Seasons," was sung with simplicity of style and great sincerity of utterance, while the enunciation of text was of unusual purity —this last factor being apparent in all the numbers given by Mr. Murrison.

The "Infelice" recitative and aria from the Verdi "Ernani," was treated with fine effect and again pleased the audience very much.

"Unfearing" (Bruno Huhn) and Mr. Murrison's own charming "Thou'rt Like a Lovely Flower," were done with extreme suavity and a control of legato which is unusual, but it was in the strictly dramatic works that Mr. Murrison was at his best.

"Uncle Rome" (Homer), "The Pipes o' Gordon's Men" (Hammond) and "Charge of the Light Brigade" (Bergen) were sung with a remarkable display of bravoura and a wonderful play of dramatic contrast. The text was enunciated with rare fidelity to the varying passions depicted, and the music was treated, in every case, legitimately and effectively. Altogether Mr. Murrison made a splendid impression and will be warmly welcomed on another appearance here.

Another singer whose work at this time was extremely well received and whose natural gifts and artistry are undoubtedly great was Mrs. Else Harthan-Arendt, whose singing of the "Romanza" from "Cavalleria Rusticana" was superb in swing and style, and whose rendition of "A Little Winding Road" (Ronald) and "The Year's at the Spring" (Beach) and "The Last Rose of Summer" (encore) proved her to have versatility and vocal art of much range.

Mrs. Arendt has a voice of splendid caliber and unlimited power; her control of all the resources of the trained singer is absolute, and her impressiveness of interpretation is away beyond the usual.

HARRY R. MURRISON

Her appearance before an audience also is most pleasing, and on Thursday she was greeted with splendid enthusiasm and the audience hearing her at this time will not be slow to endorse her work on every occasion.

Her success was enhanced by the musical and authentic accompaniments provided by Miss Grace Humphrey, a pianist of much more than the usual ability and one whose ensemble with a singer is undeniably fine.

The third soloist was Miss Gertrude Consuela Bates, who, already a great favorite at this church, was at this time doubly successful and compelled the most enthusiastic recognition from the audience.

Her playing of two movements from the Wieniawski "Second Concerto" was very artistic and was filled with a variety and a power which place Miss Bates in the front rank of local players.

The "Melody" by Charles G. Dawes was played with appealing suavity, the Randegger "Pierrot Serenade" was a perfect gem of clarity and sparkle, while Kreisler's "Liebesfreude" was delivered with an impetuosity as well as a beauty of tone which made it most interesting. Her encore numbers included the "Thais" "Meditation" and might very easily have been multiplied to a half dozen instead of two.

Mr. Ralph Gerber furnished sympathetic and colorful accompaniments for her work.

MRS. GRACE BRUNE MARCUSSON AT MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

In "An Evening of Modern French Songs" at the current Monday recital in the attractive studios of the MacBurney School, Mrs. Marcusson, soprano, contributed the program. It was an unusually attractive one, both in contents and construction. There were familiar songs and also those that had their first hearing for at least one auditor. In the latter category were the Lalo "Captive" and the Holmes' "Threnody" and the Devries song. In a measure they formed the most enjoyable moment of the evening, so full of elusive charm were they. The Holmes song in particular became wonderfully attractive as its iterations came and went in graceful weavings.

Mrs. Marcusson had her musical forces well in hand and succeeded convincingly in conveying the atmosphere of each song. Nothing that she did was better than the Bemberg "Hindu Song." She colored the weird phrases beautifully and the broken mournful ejaculations had cadences of pathos in them. Brilliantly done was the Lemaire "Vous Dansez," the little slip of memory not fretting in the least. Mrs. Marcusson's voice is so big, virile and dramatic in its tendency and her temperament follows the same course so readily that these do not willingly yield to the demands of such songs as Hahn's "Exquisite Hour." The mentality compassed it perfectly, and it was well done, but not as she will do it when a larger pliability shall come. Her growth and development along all lines is altogether admirable.

The accompaniments were in the more than adequate hands of Mr. William Lester and he read also a capital paper on "Modern French Composers."

ALBERT COTSWORTH.

MUSIC AT RAVINIA

Five operas from the standard repertory were represented this week at Ravinia Park. In order to give more time to the rehearsal of these works there was no concert given Saturday afternoon.

The arrangement for the week was: The Nile scene from "Aida" on Monday and next Sunday evenings, with Miss Lois Ewell; the fourth (final) act of "Rigoletto" on Tuesday and Saturday evenings, with Mlle. Jennie Dufau as Gilda; the mirror scene and the oasis scene from "Thais" on Wednesday evening, with Miss Ewell; the garden scene from "Faust" on Thursday evening, with Mlle. Dufau as Marguerite; the prologue, act 1, and the latter half of act 2 of "Pagliacci" on Friday evening, with Miss Ewell as Nedda.

JOHN W. NICHOLS

After a most successful month of singing at the mother Chautauqua assembly on Lake Chautauqua, N. Y., John W. Nichols, the well known tenor and teacher of voice culture, has been persuaded to open a studio at Ocean Grove, N. J., for the months of August and September, in order that those who wish to study before returning to their winter's work, can do so in a delightfully cool spot by the ocean.

The Elderly Person

The Organist said:

"Now, don't spat with me this time, because I'm fully in earnest in telling of my pleasure. In common with others I am giving myself some vacation privileges and I've just been where I have had some of the loveliest of music, doubly beautiful because unexpected. I ran out to visit some friends five hours away from Chicago. The first morning after my arrival I awoke with that mysterious certainty that an inward monitor had aroused me. It was as if in response to some call associated with a long time ago. I couldn't sense it at all at first, albeit I knew I was not imagining or dreaming. The floating sounds about me gradually focused, and then I realized that the birds were singing matins for me. Then I began to define the voices, one by one, for there was a chorus of them, each singing a different song, but not failing in exquisite harmony. I had to smile gratefully that the tireless 'tweet, tweet' of our friend the English sparrow, which is our city bird's early call, was completely smothered. I knew he was there as a sort of undertone, because he is like the dandelions, he's everywhere and mostly where he is least wanted.

"While I listened to the caroling going on, my reason told me I should be content with such an aubade, but something way back in my makeup distinctly stated that I hadn't been wakened by these fairly familiar tones, beautiful as they were. Something else had summoned me, I felt convinced, and I strained my ear to detect what might have given me such an impression. And then it came with almost startling clearness and like a mellow-toned bell across the fields. Three luscious, long-drawn, perfectly rounded notes, and then a roulade of whirling scales. I jumped out of bed in a hurry, very much awake and eager to see and hear again my boyhood friend, the cardinal; or, as we called him down south, the 'red-bird.' I had been told that he was gradually forging his way further and further north in a migratory way, but this was my first close evidence of the fact. Fronting my window was an old pine tree, rugged and scrawny, but adorable just because of its determination to keep in the running. Its new growth was coming out slowly and the greenery at the ends of its branches held up cups, for all the world like those long-haired sprawling chrysanthemums we have at the flower shows, only, of course, the color was green. It had great bolles on its stalwart sides, and it showed half-healed wounds where branches had been lopped off at the trunk. And in the gradings of the years the ground at its base had been cut away and it stood above two small terraces. Its last humility was to carry an electric light bulb. Nearby stood a thickly branched soft maple tree, also bearing the scars of years by way of branches lopped off cruelly by apparently unfriendly winds. The strong winds are really comrades in that they test the tree as to its real strength. The soft maple grows so rapidly that it becomes very decorative and not so solid as to veins and muscles. And so when examinations came around it often finds it hasn't passed, very much like some high school pupils who were disappointed at the marks on their papers.

"Up and down and in and out among the thick short recent growth of this tree a bird was running restlessly, searching the under and upper side of each inch of the section he had selected. He sent out a cheerful little fresh-voiced tone as though the mate was not far away and he was assuring her of his presence. He seemed to find abundant refreshment, and when the plump body came to view at last he was really upside down in his energetic campaign anent bugs and slugs. I knew him before I saw his stout short bill and the dashes of white in his wing feathers, the always cheerful and happy rose-breasted grosbeak. A nuthatch flattened himself against the old tree in that bat-like way he has of following his bent. Fat robins pirouetted across the lawn, saucy and confident and quite cordial to all comers, since there were worms and grubs in plenty in the springtime planting season when human beings turn up the soil freely on purpose to furnish refreshment for bird life. Then, too the cherries were showing the first tints of color that would mean red ripeness after a while and a feasting of fatness for all the robin brood. A catbird sang in the low branches of a wild crab tree preserved in a tangle in one corner of the yard. Disguise it as he might by all sorts of agile movement, it was easily indicated that the object of his solicitude was sitting on a nest of eggs not far away and he didn't want her disturbed or alarmed. He kept on calling attention to the other charming points of view which could be found in increasing number and variety a little farther off. The soft light had a glow in it making almost imperceptible shadows under the foliage, but everywhere there was a hint of the dominating force which seems to direct and order the forces of nature, so earnestly do they await its influence and so markedly do they respond to its actual presence. When the early summer sun rises and floods the earth, then every shrub and tree that has been started right and is well under way and been living according to its instructions, seems to give itself a little inflection of content, as if it were thus sure it was on the right track and starts off on the day with absolute security in its industry. Later on in the season they feel the strokes of the taskmaster compelling them to work overtime despite decreasing vitality. But in the early season he creates an enthusiastic spirit of the corps.

"Just over the stone wall at the edge of the bluff an old gnarled and weather-visaged oak tree had fought for a living for countless years. It had never been allowed to grow sturdy enough to carry a tall trunk and far-reaching branches. It was right in line and a ready target for all the storms that have a particular enjoyment in sweeping over hill crest and pouncing on what is unsuspectingly below. So it was not a shapely tree and one long limb was naked and held out its appeal to be lopped off, since it was but a disfigurement. But it was just the place for the dear cardinal, and there he sat comfortably perched and preening himself leisurely while he sang. The old limb didn't know it, probably, but it quite justified its existence by furnishing such a background of secure support. I suppose that is the way with lots of other crippled things as well as people. Furnishing the background is much like pumping the organ—it is absolutely necessary, else there wouldn't be some certain kinds of music. James Lane Allen, you remember, wrote that lovely story of 'The Kentucky Cardinal.' It is idyllicly charming. All his other stuff is so dry that I've wondered just where that little spring of real romance found substance to thread its way through his arid lands of fiction. But he caught and preserved to perfection the loving attachment everyone has for the bird who comes to know its beautiful song. It is rarely, liquidly musical in itself, and the bird sings without reserve and at all times of the day. He is as lavish in his tones and as unsparing of his vocal chords as the mocking bird. In this unstinted outpouring he makes me think of those arbors down south where the climbing roses ran riot and seemed to struggle for foothold and to wave cluster after cluster and then some more of endless blossoms, and to urge and insist that they be plucked, because there were no end of buds on hand, and more coming, and nothing would please better than to have the ripened flowers in your hand. This bird sat on that limb and sang for me in some such way, and I felt as if he knew I was reveling in his gracious profusion. He is not such a very large bird and he doesn't seem to take very good care of himself. In fact, my friends assured me that he stayed thereabouts all through this semi-northern winter. He is red all over, with just a line of black feathers under his chin, a sort of necklace. He has a crest, or topknot. I am maintaining it, as one of the traditions of my boyhood, that this crest was always black. But my friends and the authority of the bird book say I am at fault. He has a lovely arched throat, the curve running outward instead of inward, as is the customary way of human singers. I've been watching singers a long time. Those who are singers by the grace of God are the full-throated ones like the cardinal and Schumann-Heink, Caruso and Alma Gluck. Art and training and temperament do a lot, but they cannot supply the actual formation which makes that rich gurgle in the throat which thrills us to the core.

"My bird flew away after a while, but that was not the last I heard of him. He was everywhere like the roses and clover, in the fields, by the roadside, by the stream, on the islands in the river, in the park and cemetery and singing beguilingly like a happy child in an abandon of happiness and with a wealth of tenderness. The notes were round and cooling, but there was a throb or undercurrent of gentle sweetness as though he carried a message that he delivered, unconscious of its import, but done with loving spirit because he loved the source from which it came. He didn't seem to value himself at all, or care for the brilliance of the tone, but caressed each inflection to make it mean everything it should and so give to his song full significance. It was benediction."

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

THE NEMUSIER METHOD FOR VIOLINISTS

A New Invention by Carl-Frederic Steckelberg, Head of the Violin Department of the University School of Music, Lincoln, Neb.

Readers of Music News perhaps recall the announcement made some time ago in this publication of a time and labor-saving technical device invented by Mr. Carl-Frederic Steckelberg, called the Nemusier. This well-known violinist and instructor has now perfected a method which enables violinists to use it more intelligently. For the benefit of those who did not take notice of the announcement it will suffice to say that the Nemusier is a small device which represents the strings and fingerboard of the violin in one position, by means of four small platforms, one for each finger, containing little ridges which correspond to the strings of the violin. These little platforms are governed by levers controlled by adjustable springs. Each little platform represents two semi-tones for each finger on each string, and any tension found necessary may be obtained.

Mr. Steckelberg has just issued a booklet setting forth some of the most important features of his ingenious invention and of the Nemusier method from which we quote in part:

"The hand is developed by the resistance of the strings while one is practising on the violin. It is this resistance which strengthens and develops finger action and technic.

"On the Nemusier each finger receives its full share of exercise so that the development is an even growth. You will find that the trill with the third and fourth fingers will become even freer and more facile than with the other fingers, and this is proof of one of the wonderful advantages of its use.

"Muscular development is reached through the expenditure of energy. On the violin, to gain technic, you move a weight or resistance of four ounces, approximately three thirty-seconds of an inch; on the Nemusier with the springs in the third notch you move a resistance of twelve ounces, five-sixteenths of an inch; the difference is three times the resistance of the string moved; three and a third times the distance of the violin string, which is nine and one-third points in favor of the Nemusier.

"When playing on the violin one's concentration is divided between the left hand, the right hand, the eye, and the ear, while on the Nemusier all of the power of concentration is directed on the object sought, finger movement or technic—three parts of concentration on Nemusier as to one part on the violin."

The merits of the Nemusier method are these:

(a) It teaches perfect finger action.
(b) It teaches perfect finger position.
(c) It individualizes the fingers to a marvelous state of perfection.
(d) It develops speed.
(e) It develops strength so that the hand never knows fatigue.
(f) It gives one the ability to play chromatics perfectly.
(g) It makes easy all double stop work.
(h) It gives one a comprehensive knowledge of intervals.

The above mentioned booklets will be gladly sent free of charge by addressing Mr. Carl-Frederic Steckelberg, Lincoln, Neb.

MUSICAL JOURNALISM

A Paper Delivered Before the National Association of Organists' Convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., Thursday, August 7.

By CHARLES E. WATT

Why should an organists' convention be interested in the matters pertaining to Music Journalism? That is the question you are asking, and it is the question I put to myself when the subject was given to me for discussion.

There is only one answer, and that is: Reciprocity. The organists' convention, and every other convention or club of musicians, as well as the musicians as individuals, should be interested in the music papers because the music papers are interested in them and have done and are doing a great deal to make conventions profitable, inasmuch as the reports of these conventions, published in the music newspapers, reach many thousands who cannot attend the convention itself, and if the reports are well done they can influence the public thought even more than does the actual meeting.

Since the interest, therefore, is mutual—or, at least, since it should be mutual—I propose in the little I shall have to say to be very frank and to do what I can to remove some of the antagonism which unfortunately exists between various members of the music profession and the music newspapers; for the two factors should be absolutely in accord. Each can help the other mightily, and in fact each is absolutely dependent, in many ways, on the other.

When a superior officer once found two lesser officers in the army quarreling with each other, he rebuked them as follows: "Don't be so foolish as to waste your time and energy antagonizing each other; save your strength and ammunition for the common enemy."

The general public cannot be called, honestly, the enemy of either the professional musician or the music newspaper, but it, at least, is often very apathetic in its appreciation and support of the musician, and the paper can be, and is, as a matter of fact, very useful, indeed, in helping to do away with that old-time apathy and to establish the musical profession on an absolutely strong basis.

Mr. Freund, the Editor of Musical America, has recently in interviews stated some very astonishing facts in regard to the general musical situation in this country, and while he has not particularly named the Music Newspaper as one of the most important factors in this development, he might very honestly have done so; and now that the Larger American Musical Life is so well under way it is worth while to consider the American Music Weekly and see what help it may be in the Future, and perhaps suggest some things which it should not be, at the same time. No one can deny that up to date it has been as potent a factor as any in bringing the musical status of America up to its present satisfactory standpoint, and, that being true, there is no reason to suspect that in the future it will not be even more active in doing good work.

There are just four Weekly Music Papers in the United States, not counting one on the Pacific Coast, which is almost wholly local to San Francisco and the influence of which is not appreciable east of Denver, and while it is not possible nor would it be profitable to make any comparisons or show forth any differences in these four weeklies, it is nevertheless possible to state some general facts and deduct some general conclusions.

The first fact is this: The papers themselves are splendid examples of business enterprise. Few people indeed understand the cost of production of any newspaper and still fewer know that when the paper is devoted to a specialty, and may, in fact, in a sense be called a Trade Paper—it has but a limited field from which to draw sustenance. The especial duties of a music newspaper, entailing not only the ordinary newsgathering and the publicity work so well known in all newspaper offices but demanding also the constant attendance at music events and the reporting of functions at all times of the year and in all parts of the country, are arduous indeed.

In spite of these special difficulties the Music Weekly has attained a business success which is phenomenal and it is only necessary to compare any one of the American music papers with any of those published in Europe, some of which are extremely old, to see that the American music paper, like most other things American, is vastly superior to the European article, both in make-up and in content, but very especially in make-up. This entails, of course, the fact that the publishing of the American Music Newspaper is an expensive proposition and must therefore find liberal support from some source—the only logical source being the Professional Musicians, the question at once arises, is this support an essential thing and should it be continued in the future as in the past?

This question is particularly in place just at present because of the fact that many state conventions of the past two years have discussed it with much heat and very much that is derogatory of the newspaper—mostly fiction, however—has been made public at these meetings.

In the Illinois Convention of Teachers last year, for instance, the music papers were excluded from all business meetings and there was a very general discussion as to the advisability of cutting loose from the so-called "thralldom" of this press and the establishment of newer ways in which to gain "Publicity."

Also, many individuals, especially among the lesser managers, have advocated right and left the entire abolition of the Weekly Music Paper and have given, in print and otherwise, some very astonishing reasons for this attitude and have proposed an endless list of new ways to advertise, most of which have promptly fallen to the ground.

In Chicago especially the agitation has been severe and very much foolish talk on the subject of Music Papers has been indulged in.

Now, there are several special phases of the matter which I want to touch upon as briefly as possible.

To again quote Mr. Freund: An editorial in Musical America some months ago very carefully and very exactly explained the reasons why the Professional Musicians ought to advertise in the Music Weeklies and also showed convincingly that the support of the paper must come from that source.

Many musicians think that in subscribing for a music paper they are really helping to support it. In a very limited way they really are, but as Mr. Freund stated, there is ABSOLUTELY NO PROFIT IN ANY MAGAZINE except from the advertisements it carries. The subscription list might be multiplied to infinity, and yet all the money taken in from that source would be swallowed up in the cost of production of the paper itself—this is absolutely true of the American music newspaper especially—for it is produced royally and the cost is terrific.

To be successful, the Musician must be Broad Minded. He must know all about every development of his own art especially. The piano teacher who knows only piano technic and repertoire, the singer who knows only vocal art or the organist who scorns the other branches of music development will reach no high plane in his work. This is so self evident that it is unnecessary to offer any argument whatever.

What way so quick to gain this general knowledge as from the music weeklies—papers which have time to digest the situation and which are local to no one division of the country.

All musicians should, therefore, be readers of the four papers published in this country. Prohibitive in cost, you say? All four of them by subscription cost only $11.50 per year—less than one dollar a month—less than 25 cents a week for the lot!

And, even if you haven't time to read them all, think of the great mass of information they would bring you each week from which you could read what pleased you best!

Or, if four seems preposterous to you, then you should certainly be a regular subscriber for one New York paper and one published in Chicago. I have no hesitation in making this statement, for, as I have said above, it is not a matter of profit to the papers half so much as it is a question of advantage to the professional musicians, and if the papers were subscribed for and actually read more fully than now, very much of false impression would shortly disappear and the reasons why the musicians would advertise more freely in the music papers would become more clearly apparent.

An Editorial prepared some little time ago had for its caption "The Three P's" and though this article was more or less kindergarten as to content and style, it yet created so much comment at the time that it will not be improper, perhaps, to recapitulate its main points here.

The three P's are Preparedness, Personality and Publicity—all of these being absolutely essential to the public musician.

No stress need be laid now on the fact that it is foolish to enter the public arena today without Preparedness—in fact, it is not necessary, for the many millions of dollars spent in music study, the purchase of instruments, etc., are eloquent proof that we have reached, in America, a satisfactory status on that point.

That Personality is very important also is generally conceded, and, if graces of mind and body are not in evidence naturally and cannot be cultivated by the would-be public musician, he might as well abandon his career at the beginning, for lacking grace, charm and adaptability he will arrive nowhere.

Publicity, however, the really greatest factor of the three, is not so well understood, nor is it considered from any sensible or practical standpoint by the vast majority of musicians. It is only he, however, who does study it and apply its best known axioms who really becomes "great" in the estimation of the world.

A great many musicians have a lurking inner consciousness that they are really very superior people and that their musical gifts and accomplishments should bring them the best there is in the world as a matter of course. These musicians think that publicity is theirs by divine right and that the public press is maintained for their benefit.

In the early days of any community the local newspapers exist in a very hap-hazard way of course and are more than glad to grasp every opportunity to make their columns readable. The musician of the small community is a more or less notable person and he has no difficulty in getting publicity in his local press for nothing. But, as the city grows, this becomes more and more difficult until in the large cities it is in time, impossible.

Twenty-five years ago a new music school in Chicago could have almost unlimited attention from the daily press, but today, when there are perhaps fifty important schools of music and the volume of teaching has grown so enormous that it is actually one of the great commercial assets of the city, the daily press has grown positively indifferent from any other than the purely advertising standpoint, and it is a literal impossibility to get publicity now from the daily press except through pull of some sort or by payment more or less direct.

Unquestionably the same conditions are true in every large city.

It follows inevitably then, that since the daily press is interested only in foreign notables; being absolutely gullible in that direction and giving thousands of dollars' worth of free publicity in a given case if sufficiently beguiled by the manager's manipulations, the American music-maker and teacher must look to his own class of paper for his Publicity—the thing which he must have and which he must, in some way, pay for.

It is scarcely possible to find a well established musician in any line but that thinks he could very easily edit a Music Paper, and he is therefore full of ideas as to the way it should be run. As a matter of fact, there are hundreds of executive musicians in America who could actually do the editorial work of a music paper with entire satisfaction, but the question of making the paper pay is an entirely different one, and it is just on this rock that all the discussion begins and where the division of opinion between the professional musician and the music paper occurs.

The musician thinks and says that the paper ought to be educational and altruistic first of all. The publisher KNOWS that it must be commercial first of all and that the other factors must be taken care of in just proportion only.

And it seems to me much of the discussion and the bad feeling which has at any time been apparent has grown out of a lack of frankness on the part of the music papers and the fact that they have tried often to make it seem that they believed musicians to be wholly right in unreasonable demands, while at the same time they were endeavoring in round-about ways to secure the support without which they could not exist.

To put the matter quite plainly then, since the music paper is a commercial proposition and must of necessity be such, the only question between the professional musician and the paper should be one of adequate service for reasonable pay.

Startling as this statement may sound, it does not at all entail the fact that the opinions or the plans of any music paper are or need be for sale. On the contrary, the paper absolutely must have editorial writers who have opinions which they are not afraid to state, and it must have reviewers who will give honest statements of fact. But all the editorial matter should be selected with a view to dealing with generalities instead of with personalities, and all review of public work should be constructive rather than destructive. It is not necessary to print harsh comment on public work at any time, and this should apply to advertisers as well as non-advertisers of the paper.

But, after all, the real question which will be asked and which is even now being discussed everywhere is this: Must one advertise in order to receive any attention at all?

The question is purely one of Editorial choice. The Editor is absolutely within his rights in the choosing of the subjects he treats and can, with perfect propriety, ignore any thing he chooses. It is the rule of all newspaperdom. The really sensational thing must perforce receive some attention, but all the medium events and the smaller things are sifted over and chosen from according to the ideas of the editorial department, and in a music paper, for instance, if it becomes a question of sending the last available reporter to the function of an advertiser or of one offered by a non-advertiser, common sense will of course decide in favor of the former.

In other words, the music paper is under a distinct obligation to its advertisers and is under no more than the ordinary obligation to any others. From the Altruistic or the Educational side the paper has just as much right to choose its course as has any individual musician.

Purely commercial, you say? Well, let us see! You may walk on State street in Chicago, or Broadway in New York and admire the goods displayed in the store windows, but if you really want to wear these goods you must go in the store and pay real money for them. It makes no difference whether you are "talented" or "doing art work" or whether you are absolutely without funds or not—if you want the Broadway or State street goods you must find money to pay for them. And so, if the publicity offered by the music papers is good you should be willing to pay for it.

It is not, however, all of it good. I make no pretense of saying that all that has ever been done by any American music paper has been good—nor do I claim that the charges for services made by some of these papers are legitimate.

But, it is your prerogative to examine all State street or Broadway goods before you buy them, and so it is equally your privilege to study the subject of advertising in the music papers and buy only that which is reasonable and which seems to you fully worth the money asked for it.

And if the musicians of America will adopt a high grade moral way of dealing with the music newspapers and will demand a high grade moral policy in return, they will get it very speedily. The musician must not expect or exact SOMETHING for NOTHING, and the music paper on its part must be liberal, educational and altruistic as well as commercial.

What, then, would be the ideal condition? Unquestionably one in which the professional musician recognized the fact that he needs the help and the publicity of a certain number of music papers (four hardly seems too many, but possibly a fewer number) and that he will support them adequately in order that they may be enabled to do their work from a high grade standpoint without question as to the advisability of adopting any other.

In other words, the musician should advertise as freely as he thinks he can consistently afford, and in looking at the money expenditure he must be at least as altruistic as he expects the paper to be. He must not everlastingly look for the DIRECT RESULT of advertising, but he must remember that publicity is the breath of life to him and that if the music paper gives it to him freely and honestly, he must in turn yield his support freely and honestly by way of advertising in that paper. Very often musicians say, "I do not want any press notice at all unless it comes to me absolutely spontaneously. If I pay anything for it directly or indirectly, it loses its entire value."

If publicity is a commodity, a necessary commodity for the musician, why should it be valueless because paid for? A dress or a coat must be paid for just in proportion to its quality, but does that rob it of value? It may be perfectly honest of material and in make-up, and it may have involved the real artistry of a designer, yet all this is paid for when you buy it, and the material is none the less good therefore, nor is the artistry dimmed one iota because dollars have been exchanged for it.

If musicians were themselves absolutely non-commercial in their dealings with the public, they might more readily and consistently accuse the music papers of being otherwise. But to come down to facts. All professional musicians are such—first because of inclination and also because they are very glad to do much for the cause itself—but also, as the first flush of youth passes, each public musician finds more and more that his art is also his commercial asset, and he sells it by the hour or the day exactly as he sometimes accuses the paper of selling itself by the column or page.

The plain truth is this: The musician must have food, clothing, shelter, relaxation and various other essentials to life—these he must pay for in proportion as he patronizes those who keep them in stock to sell—but he also, if he would get very far along in his work, must have PUBLICITY, and he should, therefore, apportion his expenditures in such way that a part of his income is left for publicity getting. The music paper is not the only factor on which this appropriation should be expended but unquestionably, today, it is the chief one.

But, once the musician has attained a proper attitude of mind toward this problem the music paper must seek to meet this with like honesty of purpose. Not only high grade Editorial and Reportorial work should be provided and as reasonable prices for advertisement as are at all consistent with the publication of the paper should be adopted, but also, as a mutual protection, the papers should utterly repudiate any methods which could bring discredit to them and in doing this should be particularly careful to avoid the "I am holier than thou" attitude—each one, first of all striving for a high ideal and hoping that the others will also strive for the same thing and that the Music Public, honestly and freely appreciating this, will make all other methods as undesirable as they should be unprofitable.

BACH FESTIVAL

The following splendid review of the recent Bach festival was written by F. L. W. to the Philadelphia Tribune. It is reprinted, even at this late day, as an indication of the scope of the festival, no less than because it is a very readable article:

BETHLEHEM, Pa.—The eighth Bach festival has passed into history with the performance of the great Mass in B minor, which has been a feature in five of seven previous festivals. The Bach choir, under Dr. J. Fred Wolle's direction, has never given such convincing evidence of his masterful and illuminative guidance of the ensemble. The choir knows every line of the music by heart in the truest sense of the words, and the veterans of the organization, who have taken part from the first performance in the old Moravian Church, 13 years ago, form a nucleus around which each year a loyal and coherent body of singers binds itself in the feeling that this music is as worthy an intellectual and ideal avocation as any to which the leisure hours of their lives could be given.

Above all, the hearer felt the unquestionable sincerity of the performances. It was plain that every line of the score had been dissected, bit by bit, that Doctor Wolle had made the singers go over every phrase, every measure, every syllable, in fact, with a patient iteration which might have been wearisome if the whole process had not been informed by the loving enthusiasm of every one concerned. Doctor Wolle, while conducting, leans over the stand with the unquenchable eagerness of one who is discovering for the first time how noble and how beautiful the music is, and not as though it were an old, old story to his profound scholarship. His hands seem to be explaining continuously what he reads there, and to be constantly appealing to his choral forces to see in the music what he sees, and to behold visions and dream dreams that are like unto his own. He does not use a baton.

HIS HANDS INSPIRE

From sheer custom one cannot help imagining now and then the quick mercurial flash of the magic wand that is invisible, but one realizes that something of the intimate personal contact of the director and the directed, something of the communal spirit would be lost if the baton came between those tense and quivering fingers and the intent, responsive ranks looking down upon their leader's face as though their lives depended on inheriting and reflecting the inspiration he translates to them from "that great place toward which all music goes." Nor is it too much to affirm that their lives do depend upon it, for all other cultural interests in the beautiful twin cities among the green hills are subordinate from year to year to the apocalyptic creative imagination manifested in the works of Johann Sebastian Bach.

More than 5,000 persons heard the music of the two days, and to the making of this Pennsylvania Oberammergau the whole of the country and even foreign lands contributed. These audiences or congregations are not like the generality of such assemblages. They went into the lofty nave and transept of Packer Memorial Chapel in the spirit of worship, and applause was, of course, eliminated. Within a pew's length in whatever direction one would almost surely find one or more of the high priesthood of music, and the remainder were reverent laity. Many as they listened held in hand the vocal score and followed every mutation of solo contralto or commentatory oboe or whatever the musical argument of the moment might be.

Representatives of fourteen states, as well as Mexico and Canada, had come under the liberal auspices of Lehigh University to listen to the music and to say with Wordsworth "And as I mounted up the hill the music in my breast I bore, long after it was heard no more." For part of the inspiration it was, surely, to wander between-whiles through the nocturnal mystery or the golden afternoon sunlight beneath the oaks and chestnuts of the loveliest hillside arena imaginable for such a spiritual tournament of song. Doctor Drinker, president of the university, is president of the choir as well, and the university authorities, Vice President Emery, Registrar Walters, and many others who deserve to be named honoris causa, were indefatigably assiduous for the comfort and the welfare of the visiting enemy of pilgrims.

Merely to illustrate the diversity of the gathering, a cursory survey of the roster of applicants for seats is suggestive. There came in force pupils and teachers of the New England Conservatory of Music, at Boston; the Conservatory at Ypsilanti, Mich.; Madame Bowman's school in Montreal; the Comstock Music School of New York; Miss Lankenau's school; Madame Froelich's Music School, at Harrisburg, and forty-four other similar institutions and conservatories. Professor Hall, Doctor Gibson and Professor W. Kugler came from Boston. There was a delegation from the Cincinnati Orchestra Association. Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and North Dakota were the states represented, as well as the District of Columbia. Besides the cities mentioned there were guests from Buffalo, Troy, Brooklyn, Elmira, Saratoga, Akron, Indianapolis, Chicago, Washington, Wilmington, Trenton, Baltimore, Cambridge, Jersey City, Elizabeth and Plainfield.

PHILADELPHIA'S PART

Philadelphia, providing most of the orchestra and two of the soloists, sent hundreds of distinguished members of its musical fraternity and its aristocracy of culture. The large proportion of trained musicians made the chorales, in which the standing audience joined, thrillingly effective. No ordinary congregation can be expected at sight to compass the difficult intervals of Bach's majestic polyphony.

A few minutes before each of the four sessions trombone players, including the seldom heard soprano trombone, ascended to the lofty belfry of the church and woke the echoes of the hills with chorales in slow and solemn measures, making pronounced use of the slides in quaint accord with amateur Moravian tradition. For this preliminary invocation is a labor of love and not of professional duty with those who engage in it. As the last notes melted into silence—or, perhaps, the wondering birds took up the strain—the greensward was emptied of its reverential groups and the dim interior of the church was filled, leaving a cluster of late-comers craning and on tiptoe at the open door. From the first notes of the St. Matthew Passion to the prayer for peace at the end of the glorious mass, an atmosphere was created in benedictional offsetting against the hectic fever and stress of modern life, the serfhood of stale custom, the domination of whatsoever things are crass and gross and material.

The music is as large as the sky, as ample as nature. Its diapason is the fundamental truth. It was too big and too fine for the four walls to hold it—every long-drawn note, every tense and throbbing suspension, each majestic cadence seemed to mount to the very gate of heaven that it might be laid a mortal offering at the feet of God. The world was no more with those who sang or those who listened, and it had long ago fallen away from the feet and the eyes of him who directed in something of the ecstatic rapture of a major prophet.

The arrangement of the choir of 250, with a chorus of mannerly children at the back, brought the men's voices between the sopranos and the altos, the entire alignment of the choral forces being vaguely upon the order of a somewhat distorted Maltese cross. The organ, with T. Edgar Shields at the keyboard, was at the right as one faced the choir. The sixty players, chiefly drawn from the Philadelphia Orchestra, with Harry Meyer, their capable concertmeister, and five soloists, were at Dr. Wolle's omniscient and omnipresent right and left hand, with two double basses formidably looming at each wing-tip of the instrumental corps. That gave Dr. Wolle the generalship of the field and enabled him to bring his batteries into action or hold the light infantry at the rear in abeyance, as the occasion demanded.

It is not feasible, without prolongation into a small treatise, to give with titular quotation the precise chapter and verse of the multifold points of excellence of choir and soloists alike. The latter were Grace Kerns, soprano; Florence Mulford Hunt and Margaret Adsit Barrell, contraltos; Nicholas Douty, tenor; E. A. Jahn and Horatio Connell, basses.

SOLOISTS ARE EXCELLENT

Miss Kerns, of girlish presence, sang with a certain inspired abandon and freedom and ingratiating freshness of tone quality that earned at once and retained for her throughout the explicit admiration of her hearers. Mrs. Hunt and Mrs. Barrell have voices of the authentic contralto mellowness and unctuousness, in fortunate alliance with the faculty of divination of the sense and sentiment of the text. Nicholas Douty's positive genius as an exponent of oratorio has been manifested so often that the thought of his participation is almost inseparable from the idea of a Bach festival. His singing of "My God, My God, Why Hast Thou" was an inspiration. Mr. Douty delivered all his lines with that familiar lyric ease and flowing spontaneity which are the special delightful characteristics of his method, and though at the fag-end of a particularly arduous season, his voice sustained the heavy burden of the magnificent declamatory narration with no perceptible impairment of its buoyant resiliency and sufficing volume.

The strength of Mr. Jahn's performance lay in its dramatic intensity and whole-hearted sincerity which made his enactment a vital characterization and not merely a vocal performance. His voice was not in the best condition and would not do all that he wanted it to do. Mr. Connell was a figure of epic dignity and gravity befitting the solemn import of the measures freighted with the words of the Redeemer, and the tone quality was pure and sweet and effortlessly pronounced. In some particulars, the orchestral support deserved high praise; in others, the result of taking eleventh-hour chances was only too plainly apparent.

The wind instruments were almost unfailingly admirable. Oboes, English horn and flute were wonderfully good, and with the clarinet and French horn bore off the instrumental honors. They proceeded serenely ahead through mazes of runs in thirds and sixths, leaving the 'cellos—the chief structural weakness—to their own dilatory and feeble devices.

OBLIGATOS FINELY PLAYED

The French horn obligato for Mr. Connell's "Quoniam tu Sanctus" in the mass was beautifully played. In any stricture upon voices or instruments it is only fair to bear in mind the fact that Bach multiplies the difficulties with majestic disregard of human fallibility. As a rule, the work of Mr. Shields at the organ keyboard was unobtrusively excellent. The brasses were notably subdued, as compared with last year, when they were too loud. Throughout the mass the orchestra was much better than on the opening day, for the frequent performances at previous festivals partially atoned for the lack of rehearsal on the present occasion.

On both days there was highly commendable work done in certain of the instrumental interludes, and the accompaniment in the mass of the chorus "Cum Sancto Spiritu" and in many other places was to be praised without reserve.

The choir itself offered a revelation of what instructed and unwavering devotion can accomplish. It seems at all points to present an impregnable front to adverse criticism, even if one were inclined to be captious. One could not ask for anything more or better. The crescendos, swelling in volume from the faintest shadow of a tone to a full-blooded, pulsing richness of sound that filled the edifice to overflowing, were created by virtue of the fact that every singer gave "the last full measure of devotion" to every note, not merely as a note but as part of a chord. In the gorgeous climaxes, when, as Handel would have said, "the heavens opened," body and soul and mind were enlisted in the corporate service with an enkindling fervor that communicated a like exaltation of spirit to the listener.

To those who have so long lived and breathed beneath his direction, even the crook of Dr. Wolle's little finger has come to mean something—much more so the passionate appeal of his facial and manual predominance, and the finality of the quivering descent of the clenched fists. These vibratory fingers that hold as in a leash the polyphonic thunders and harmonious lightnings can well afford to dispense with a flimsy stick—the true diviner needs no divining rod. The threnody, the agony, the contrition of the Son of God were made his own by this great leader of leadable men and women, as though he entered with mortal humility and reverence into the mind of the Man of Sorrows acquainted with grief. When the words "I will smite the shepherd" were sung, with the reiterated notes, the leader's arm descended as though in the retributory action.

AUDIENCE IMPRESSED

In the scene of the Last Supper the hand that was placed in the dish amid the awestruck, incredulous interrogation of the disciples was the hand that unlocked the door to the participation of the whole assemblage in a communion service lacking only the physical presence of the consecrated elements. The reverential atmosphere at all times, indeed, was a signal feature of the festival that could not escape the thoughtful observation of the visitor. The silence was unqualified—a profound, Sabbatical hush, in the midst of a community largely monopolized by steel mills and interlacing railways. "Shew not forth words where there is a musician" was the wisdom of Ecclesiasticus, and these audiences did not rustle their program books, did not talk about servants and clothes, and did not rush pell-mell to get back to the broad highway and the cluttered booths of Vanity Fair. What a constant contrast was all this with the market place of "man's fitful uproar mingling with his toil!"

The sense of rhythm implanted in the choir, the implicit obedience to their leader's glance or lightest gesture, the startling unanimity of attack, the balance of the voices (a few more strong tenors are a desideratum), the towering tremendousness of the climaxes, were points of superiority luminously manifest. Such singing as that of the opening "Kyrie Eleison" of the mass, the outwelling and the receding of the culminant voices in the "Cum sancto Spiritu," the buoyant jubilation of the "Hosanna in Excelsis," the touching pathos of the final prayer for peace—these it is not possible to translate into other terms than those of the patriarch who gave immortal formulation to the spiritual aspiration of mankind.

There should not be neglect to add that the Bethlehems, the public, the cause of music at large owe grateful acknowledgement to Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the executive committee, whose generous aid and broad-minded comprehension of the permanent values of life have made these festivals possible.

CHURCH OF THE COVENANT

Mr. J. B. Trowbridge, director of the Covenant chorus at the Church of the Covenant, Belden avenue and Halsted street, gave a most successful mid-summer song service last Sunday evening. Assisting the very excellent choir of twenty-five voices was the Moody Institute Ladies Quartet. Finer blending of voices it has rarely been the pleasure of the writer to hear. The members are:

Misses Gable, Page, Pratt and Dennison.

Miss Susan Reuter, soprano, gave a fine reading of "Teach Me to Pray" (Jewitt) in a voice quite surpassingly beautiful and showing very careful training.

Mr. H. E. Osterholm, baritone, offered "Hold Thou My Hand" (Gounod). On this occasion he again made the favorable impression which his work always creates. His voice is one of real tonal beauty. A. Osterholm assisted at the organ.

Mrs. R. G. Stowell, organist of the Church of the Covenant, gave very able assistance in accompanying during the evening.

PLANS FOR CHICAGO OPERA COMPANY OUT

Announcement is made by Cleofonte Campanini, general manager of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, of two important engagements for that organizations. These are Giuseppe Sturani, who last season was one of the conductors at the Metropolitan Opera House here, and Lucien Muratore, a tenor, who has sung at the Paris Grand Opera and other continental musical institutions for some time past, and who was recently heard in this country in concert.

Mr. Campanini, has also obtained the American rights for the production of "Mona Vanna" and "Cristofore Colombo," both of which operas will be given by the Chicago company this season. The former will receive its premiere in the United States on the evening of December 26, in Chicago. Miss Mary Garden will be heard in the title role and M. Muratore will likewise sing. During the season Director Campanini will produce "Madame Butterfly" in English. The tenors engaged for the company include Dalmores, Bassi, Bonci, Giorgini and Campagnola. A partial list of the singers who will be heard with the Chicago company bears the names of Mary Garden, Francesco Daddi, Aristodemo Giorgini, Gustav Huberdeau, Margaret Keyes, Osborn-Hannah, Edmond Warnery, Clarence Whitehill, Glenn Hall, Giovanni Polese, Rosina Galli, Minnie Egener, Nicolo Fossetta, Titta Ruffo and Marcel Charlier, the conductor.—New York Press.

MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

Vern Burnham, baritone, assisted by William Lester, accompanist, will give a program of songs by Franz Schubert, next Monday night, August 11, in the MacBurney studios. The program will be as follows:

The Raven
Her Picture
Courage
The Wanderer
The Linden Tree
Death and the Maiden
Hunter's Song
The Stormy Morning
The Phantom Double
Thou Art My Rest
By the Sea
Phantom Fires

G. Schirmer Company of New York have accepted a song by William Lester, "A Dirge," which will appear from that press shortly. The White-Smith Publishing Company of Boston are issuing four songs by the same composer, "As a Perfume Doth Remain," "Compensation," "Echo," and "To Phillis." Also, during the past few weeks, the Studio Publishing Company of this city has put out the following works by William Lester: "Just as I Am," sacred song; "In the Quiet Hours with Jesus," duet for high and low voices; "Hushabye, My Baby" and "Rockabye Town," two lullabies for low voice; "Abide with Me," an anthem for mixed voices, and "To Music" and "Song of Proserpine," two short songs for high voice. "My Prayer," a dramatic sacred song will be published by Clayton F. Summy & Co.

Music in America

BOSTON, MASS.

A most encouraging recognition of the value of music study to every-day sort of people, those who will enjoy it, mostly, at social home gatherings and in community entertainments, is being shown by writers in the local papers and a letter from Dr. Charles W. Eliot to Daniel Bloomfield, leader of the Boston Music School Settlement, is a strong endorsement of the work of the settlement in teaching music free of charge in the north end of Boston, and in an appreciation of the absolute human need of music to all our people.

Mr. Bloomfield appeals for funds to carry on the work of the settlement, which opens its fourth season, September 4.

In the Boston Sunday Post, August 3, Dr. Eliot, speaking of "the inaptitude of the ordinary American boy or girl for musical attainment," says, in part, "Indeed, we do not compare with the Italians, Poles, Swedes and Germans in appreciating and understanding music. It will be generations before we can equal them. The subject has been neglected or very little attended to in the public and private schools of the United States. The progress of music in New England has depended for the most part on private money given for public uses.

"This settlement offers an admirable opportunity to invest private money in the happiness and contentment of children. It is happiness which comes of achievement—a very solid kind of happiness which we win when we do something worth while for the benefit of other people, while giving full play to our own faculties.

"It has always seemed to me a great pity that the generous givers of private money for public uses in New England should not make most of their gifts in their lifetime, while they are able to enjoy the satisfaction of seeing the pervasive good they have done. If any are inclined to say, 'One is not sure of always doing good by giving away money; it is possible to do harm with money'—true; but the Boston Music School Settlement is an investment with a sure profit. There is no doubt about the benefits or the happiness it brings. Its work is of proved utility; for it rests on common qualities in human nature and permanent needs in human society."

"Very truly yours,
"Charles W. Elliot."

M. A. DeWolfe Howe, in the Boston Herald of July 18, in "Place of Music in Settlement Work," says: "Less than twenty years ago the first social settlement, Toynbee Hall, opened its doors in the east end of London. Canon Barnett, its founder, died only the other day. Yet the settlement was long since accepted as one of the vital agencies in bringing to pass a better understanding between the more and the less fortunate human elements in the modern world—a better training of both these sections of society for the lives they have to live. Already the specializing of settlement work has been carried far. A few months ago the third annual conference of the National Association of Music Social Societies—representing a highly specialized form of settlement service—was held in Boston. Out of twenty schools already established in widely separated American cities, fifteen were represented at the conference. Already the music school, based upon the settlement idea, has taken its place as a definite institution in modern city life. If it has not yet passed wholly beyond the experimental stage, it has gone far enough to be classed with the experiments that are succeeding. It has become a force which those who are interested in music and democracy—or, better still, in both—must reckon with.

"By reason of differing circumstances, the schools differ in their special aims. In some, particular stress is laid upon orchestral instruments and ensemble playing; in others, upon vocal instruction and choral singing. In Philadelphia the experiment of scattering small schools throughout the city rather than concentrating upon one or two large schools is on trial. In West Newton the nature of the work is indicated by the title of the organization, 'The West Newton Music School for Public School Children and Wage-earners of the City of Newton.' The public school officials are co-operating heartily with the undertaking, have sanctioned the use of a public school building for night instruction, and recognize 'credits' in music school work as steps towards a high school diploma. . . . .

"In Boston, the Boston Music School Settlement, at 110 Salem street, and the South End Music School, at 19 Pembroke street, have been in active service for nearly three years. By placing the actual production of good music within the reach of the children of the North and South ends, these schools are exerting a civilizing influence upon a large number of the future citizens of Boston which words and figures cannot precisely measure.

"The South End Music School is an independent organization closely affiliated with the South End House, and under the presidency of Mr. Arthur Foote. It has laid a special emphasis on combining musical instruction of a genuinely high order with the spirit of social service which has characterized the best settlement work. Some statistics of its activities are illuminating. Opening in November, 1910, with thirty-nine pupils, it has had under instruction during the past year 250 pupils, studying the piano, violin, viola, 'cello and double bass, harmony, solfeggio, and vocal music. There is a chorus of about twenty-five voices, led by Mr. Clement Lenon of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a "senior orchestra" of fifty-one, led by Mrs. Arthur Shepherd, and a "junior orchestra" of eighteen, made up of pupils of the music school. There are thirty-five teachers, of whom fifteen volunteer their services. A Parents' Association, testifying to the interest of the neighborhood in the undertaking, number forty-three.

"All this varied work has had its center in the minute wooden house on Pembroke street, where the school originally established itself. The orchestras and chorus have required far more space than the house affords, and have met outside its walls. At this moment there is a promising movement on foot to acquire a much larger house, ideally suited to the purposes of the school, in the immediate neighborhood. Generous friends are doing what they can to make its purchase possible. More friends, and a more widely distributed generosity, will turn the possible into the real. A Boston institution which has already so completely justified its existence is surely not to have its normal and valuable growth hampered by the lack of means.

"Since human creatures began trying to better the lot of their fellows, individuals and groups have arisen in the belief that their particular means of betterment would solve the whole problem of evil and misery. The fact is that no single agency is going to do it all—any more than 'Christian unity' in forms of worship and belief will turn the world into a spiritual paradise. A great many agencies are required. The diversity of human needs cries aloud for a diversity of helpful influences. Certain things are known to quicken the life of the spirit—and music is one of them. Our material progress seems to take care of itself. The tangible rewards of those who promote it keep the vineyard full of laborers. The friends of the music schools believe with all their hearts that every contribution of interest, active or merely sympathetic, to the work which these organizations are doing, is a genuine contribution to the spiritual progress of our people."

The profession of music may be looked upon by the rank and file as something better than a time-server, after the true import of such words as just quoted has sunk deep into the public mind. Let us hope that the American boy and girl, yes, man and woman, be diligent so that it may not again be true to write that they have an "inaptitude for musical attainment." Don't let it take many generations.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Worcester Festival

Liszt's "Mephisto" waltz will be one of the works that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play at the Worcester Musical Festival, September 29 to October 3.

This waltz was first played in Boston by Theodore Thomas in 1870, and J. S. Dwight, critic, declared that it was "positively devilish, such music is simply diabolical and shuts out every ray of light and heaven, from whence music springs."

Mr. Thomas still played it in Boston, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra has given it many times upon its program.

Personal

Frederick Curtis Butterfield, Harvard, '05, will be the head of the piano department at the University of West Virginia, next year.

Avis N. Wheeler, a pupil of W. L. Whitney, goes to Westbrooke Academy, Portland, Me., as teacher of singing.

Miss Ida Wilson, a well known contralto to Boston and Lowell churches, goes to Lake Erie Seminary, near Cleveland, as teacher of singing. She was a member of the Boston Opera Company a few years ago.

Susan L. Brown has been chosen teacher of singing at Salem Academy, in Winston, N. C.

Beatrice N. Knight of Hudson, Mass., will fill a position at Southern Red Springs, N. C.

Beatrice N. Sherwood, graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, will be teacher of piano at the Synodical college, Fulton, Mo., next year.

Edward Royce, Harvard, '07, will be head of the music department at Middlebury College, Middlebury, Vt., next season.

Carol C. McKee, of Toledo, Ohio, goes to Arcadia Seminary, Nova Scotia, as the director of music.

Ruth J. Bailey, formerly assistant teacher of singing at Denison University, Dansville, Ohio, goes to the Girls' Technical Institute, Montevallo, Alabama, as teacher of singing.

Mary J. Johnston of Los Angeles, Cal., formerly of Pittsburgh, will be the head of the music department of St. Mary's college, Dallas, Texas, next year.

Henry C. Lahee's Church and College Agency was instrumental in bringing about these engagements.

Registration for next year will begin at the New England Conservatory of Music September 11, and the first term begins the 17th.

Charles Rendell Calkins, a graduate of the Faelten Pianoforte School, class of 1908, has been appointed musical director of the Girls' Technical Institute, Montevallo, Ala., and will enter upon his duties in September.

The fashionable summer colony at Annisquam gathered at the cottage of Mrs. Oliver E. Williams, Thursday the 24th, to hear Mary Morton Washburn, a talented young student of the Faelten Pianoforte School. Tea was served in the pretty appointed music room, and during the afternoon Miss Washburn played a varied program of Scarlatti, Field, MacDowell, Debussy and Cyril Scott pieces.

AMERICAN MUSICAL PILGRIMAGES

One of the evidences of musical development in America is the establishment here and there in different parts of the country of musical festivals, says the Outlook. These perform a double function. In the first place, each of them forms a center of musical interest and education for a region that includes not only towns and cities, but also rural communities. In the second place, each of them becomes the object of what might be called musical pilgrimages. One of the older of these festivals is that at Ann Arbor, Mich. The University of Michigan was the first state university to develop a large interest in music. Perhaps this festival helps to explain the fact that there is scarcely a farmhouse in the middle west that does not have its piano or parlor organ. Another festival that ought to be better known is the Litchfield county festival held at Norfolk, Conn. Perhaps most distinctive of all such festivals is that which a few years ago was held each year and even oftener at Bethlehem, Pa., and has now been revived at South Bethlehem—the Bach festival, under the direction of Dr. J. Fred Wolle. Nowhere, certainly in this country, can Bach's music be heard under conditions so nearly resembling those under which it was intended to be given than there. Bethlehem is a Moravian center, and the traditions of the Moravian Church are musically as well as devotionally those that obtained in the church for which Bach wrote his great choral works. It would be a mistake to call this festival a series of musical performances; it is really a series of musical services. It is not surprising, therefore, that people from all over the country should go as pilgrims to this Bach festival. At these services teachers and pupils of music, musical critics and plain music-lovers gather from New England, from New York, from Harrisburg, from Michigan, and from so distant a point as Montreal, and from many other places. It is a pilgrimage worth many times over the making.—Chicago Post.

RIHELDAFFER IN THE SOUTH

Grace Hall Riheldaffer's southern tour is proving a most popular success. In a limited space one may only quote occasional sentences from columns written in her praise. From the Pensacola Journal, May 29, we may glean such comments as "Mme. Riheldaffer is the fortunate possessor of a pure lyric soprano voice, not strong, but clear and thrilling." . . . . "Her selections included 'Wie Nahte mir der Schlummer,' sung so artistically and perfectly that an encore was demanded." . . . . "Puccini's 'One Fine Day' also aroused enthusiasm and 'The Last Rose of Summer' was superbly sung as an encore." . . . . "The liquid tones of the concert flute and muted cornet danced and warbled from the singer's lips with indescribable crispness and clearness." . . . . "Del Acqua's 'Chanson Provencale' sent the audience wild with enthusiasm. Three encores were not enough and it began to look like an all-night session." N. R. EBERHART.

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

Realize, vitalize, idealize your text—that is the acme of interpretative art.

There is no magic in concentration, nor any secret to its attainment. Concentration and consecration are synonymous.

Unless you have a definite and clear conception of your work, how can you expect your listeners to gain it from your playing?

The classics wear best after all. "there's a reason."

Bromidic, yet everlastingly true—technic is a means. Do not make it an end.

Play (or rather sound) the piano. Don't allow the piano to play with you.

In inferior piano playing, "time is music," but not money.

There's many a slip between the dead note and the live tone.

Work is the overcoming of resistance. Do not confuse perspiration with inspiration.

The great artists make their dreams come true.

The pianoforte has been the means of developing most of the world's great musicians.

A melody beautifully sung on the piano is worth hours of pyrotechnics.

If you have musical feelings, share them with your fellowmen. Music is public business.

To be successful in public piano playing, it is only necessary to play better than the majority of your listeners. Moral: choose your "weapons" and—your locality.

Very frequently the pianist's right hand should not know what his left hand is doing. Still, both hands should always "work together."

If you wish to do your best in public piano playing, you should be able to do ten times better at home.

If you do not know how to use the pedals—don't. If you wish to know how, consult some one who does.

If you are attracted to the playing of artists, go home and "try it on your piano."

ROCK ISLAND

The Rock Island Monday Music Club closed its active work of the season last evening at the Van Sant Studio, Second avenue, with a program of much excellence, rendered in a manner that afforded real pleasure to the invited guests in attendance.

"Love's Rapture" by Kortheuer, and "The Vow" by Craig, both songs requiring intensity of dramatic expression and a high degree of artistry were sung by Mrs. Gertrude Carse Appelquist, in such a manner as to sustain her already achieved reputation in this line of work.

Mrs. J. K. Scott's interpretation of "The Swallows" (Vilanelle) enabled this well known vocalist to display a vocal technic in musicianly style not often equaled by our local artists, while in "I Hear You Calling Me" by Marshall, she demonstrated that the above mentioned technical skill had not been developed, as is too often the case, at the sacrifice of tenderness and soulful expression.

Miss Florence Winter, contralto, in Cowan's "Promise of Life," exhibited vocal powers unusual in so young a singer.

Fred Mielke, a tenor barely out of his teens, displayed a sympathetic voice and much musical taste in "A Dream" by Bartlett.

Barney Brotman, also tenor, won much applause in Craig's "Tell Me Fairest Maiden."

Miss Cora Graves in "Life's Lullaby" exhibited a contralto voice of quality and power, which with further study should make her talents a valuable asset to local musical circles.

The singing of Mrs. M. F. Wiedeman of Burlington, Ia., (soprano) elicited many expressions of approval and delight from the assembled guests.

Mrs. J. K. Goltman sang "There Is a Land" with real inspiration, showing a voice of richness and capable of much expression.

"The Pilgrim's Message" by Craig, which was sung by Mrs. Appelquist, assisted by a double quartet, proved an interesting feature of the program.

Mrs. Appelquist delivered the solo part in an admirable manner, and in the ensemble portions, the quartet rose, especially in the finale, to the splendid climax afforded by this dramatic composition.

Professor Thor Norberg, in a few feeling remarks, after welcoming the guests, expressed on behalf of the club, their gratitude to Mr. Van Sant, the director, and their sincere appreciation of his painstaking and untiring effort. Mr. Norberg expressed the hope and belief that with the coming fall the club would achieve still better results.

Mrs. J. K. Goltman played the accompaniments in an able manner. A light collation was served after the program. The active work of the club will be resumed October 7.

MRS. RAY BAKER.

CHAUTAUQUA, N. Y.

On Monday, July 21, "The Messiah" was given by the Chautauqua soloists for July, the Chautauqua choir and orchestra, with Mr. Vincent at the organ and Mr. Shattuck at the piano, directed by Mr. Alfred Hallurn.

The exceedingly smooth and beautiful rendition of this immortal oratorio was received with great favor by the audience, who signified their appreciation by enthusiastic applause.

In their artistic phrasing and clean attacks the choir never appeared to better advantage than in the inspiring choruses, giving them with great power and expression.

The work of all of the soloists was exceptionally fine, especially in the following numbers: "Why Do the Nations so Furiously Rage," sung by Mr. Ashley Ropps; "Comfort Ye My People," sung by Mr. John Nichols; "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth;" "He Was Despised and Rejected of Men," sung respectively by Mrs. Marie Stapleton Murray, and by Miss Viola Ellis.

On account of indisposition Miss Eva Wycoff, the July soprano, was unable to take part in the "Messiah," or to continue her work for July.

Miss Wycoff's thorough capability as a musician, and the splendid quality of her voice won sincere appreciation on the several occasions in which she appeared.

In Sullivan's "Golden Legend" Miss Wycoff's voice was heard to great advantage in her excellent rendition of the attractive parts assigned to "Elsie" in this beautiful cantata. Also among other program numbers, Miss Wycoff did very pleasing work. In the Irish Song Cycle, "A Kerry Courting," she gave the part of Mrs. Kerry with spirit and expression.

The largest audience of the season attended the performance of "Il Trovatore," Verdi's best known opera, which was given with great brilliancy and effect.

The orchestral work was especially beautiful; the vocal soloists entered into the spirit of the theme and gave their parts with artistic feeling.

Miss Severson displayed fine quality of voice in Leonora's aria "Can I Believe the Vision Blest?" Mrs. Nita Phillips Norris in the role of Inez sang in a pleasing style and with purity and richness of tone.

Miss Viola Ellis' excellent contralto was never better than in the aria "Fierce Flames Are Soaring."

Mr. John Nichols, a great favorite at Chautauqua, was extremely pleasing in "Tremble Ye Tyrants," while in the "Miserere" his tender, melting tones held the audience.

In the part of Ferrando Mr. Frank Croxton did excellent work. Mr. Ashley Rapp's rendition of "The Tempest of the Heart" was smooth and masterly.

The miscellaneous concert of Friday, August 1, afforded a pleasing variety in the program, which consisted of numbers by the band, choir, mandolin school, Mr. Hutcheson of piano department, Mr. Croxton of the voice department and three of the soloists for August.

The program was as delightfully rendered as it was pleasing in its variety and program numbers.

The three soloists for August appearing at this concert were Miss Myrtle Thornburg, soprano; Mrs. Cora Barker Janney, contralto; Mr. Oscar H. Lehmann, tenor. The latter is not new to Chautauqua, having created quite a favorable impression here in 1911. A CHAUTAUQUAN.

NATIONAL CONVENTION QUESTIONS

The following list of questions were propounded for discussion at the convention of the N. A. O. at Ocean Grove this week:

Can the N. A. O. do more for organists than any other association?

How can we interest the clergy in the work of the association?

Shall we endeavor to elevate musical taste by constantly presenting music of the highest type, or shall we "stoop to conquer"?

How may congregational singing be encouraged?

Do not our choirs lean too much upon the organ?

How may we obtain good, unaccompanied singing?

Should the minister select the hymns and the organist the tunes?

What is sacred music?

Should religious words ever be adapted to secular tunes?

How may special musical services be made attractive without loss of reverence or dignity?

How can a simple service be made effective and attractive?

Are music committees necessary?

Are Sunday organ recitals advisable?

Are free organ recitals advisable?

Does not the organist who gives a free recital cheapen himself and his art, and tend to make organ music even less esteemed than it is?

Are organ recitals as attractive as piano recitals or violin recitals?

If not, is the fault in the instrument itself, or in the players?

Are transcriptions of orchestral and other works justifiable on the organ?

Why is the organist "the only musician who does not practice his instrument?"

How may we use our hymnals intelligently?

Can congregational rehearsals for hymn-singing be made practicable?

Is it not possible, by bringing the clergy and music committees into touch with the aims and ideals of organists, to abolish the vulgarity and vanity of the "Gospel Hymn?"

Is the music of the church a mere bait to attract people so that they may be reached by preacher? or

Is church music to be considered as an integral part of the service?

DENVER

The Cavallo Symphony Orchestra was heard at Lakeside Friday afternoon, August 1, in its eighth concert. The symphony chosen was the Mendelssohn, No. 4, known as the Italian.

In the four movements of this symphony, each one entirely different in theme, we find an individuality, and melodiousness that ensures the retention of the whole in one's mind. The opening movement, allegro vivace, with its brilliant sweep of violins, accompanied by the wind instruments, furnishes a first theme. Then the order is reversed and a new theme is announced, the strings accompanying.

In the second movement, andante con moto, with its sombre touch, the orchestra's fine legato was very effective. The third movement Con moto moderato, subdued in style, expressing simplicity, strongly contrasted with the fourth movement, saltarello. This dance theme, with its insistent presto, interwoven with lacey cadenza's, makes a brilliant.

Mr. Cavallo is to be complimented on the work of his orchestra; the clear tone, and the unity expressed.

In the choice of the soloist, Mrs. Bessie Dade Hughes, contralto, we feel that it was indeed a privilege to be present at this concert. Mrs. Hughes has a poise so perfect, that her audience is attuned to her mind just as soon as she appears before them. Personally, I know her as one who radiates sunshine wherever she goes, and coupled to this charming personality is a voice of such a lovely quality, that she has won for herself the place of leading contralto in our city. Her selection was "Farewell, Ye Mountains," from Tschaikowsky's "The Maid of Orleans."

In the work of the orchestra, which is so beautiful in this aria, we find a setting for words, that are filled with a heart break, and still are so dominant in purpose, that a fine climax is possible. Mrs. Hughes' interpretation of this famous song created an impression on her audience of finished artistry. Her encore, "I Am Thy Harp" with harp accompaniment, was something exquisite. The appreciation of her audience amounted to an ovation.

Saint-Saens furnished a number for the orchestra, two movements from the Suite Algerienne. In the "Reverie du Soir," was reflected a drowsiness and suggestion of pipes, quite different from the lively second movement, "March Militaire Francaise."

The "Elegia" from the "Serenade for Strings," Tschaikowsky, so perfect in construction, subdues by its intense quiet and sincerity.

The last number rendered was Massenet's Overture to "Phaedre." This overture with its tragic key allows for an intensely dramatic treatment that makes a splendid closing number for a program.

An interesting note from last week's concert by this orchestra, when an all Tschaikowsky program was given, is that an original score of the Sixth Symphony was used. This had been marked by the composer and presented to Alexander Saslavsky, then a young musician studying in St. Petersburg. Mr. Saslavsky is concert master of Cavallo's orchestra.

GARY, IND.

Musicians in Gary, Ind., are active to an extent which would reflect credit upon a city much older, and certainly one possessed of more than fifty thousand inhabitants. With a musical club of about one hundred members, a male chorus of perhaps the same number of able singers, and a municipal band of forty pieces, the musical progress of the town is being well cared for.

The permanency of the Gary Municipal band is quite assured. James H. Ward, the director, is well cast for his part, his several years of service as soloist and director having qualified him beyond question.

The following are among the players:

Dr. C. H. Reyher, Robert Reyher, A. A. Clendenin, C. V. Hinman, John Pollack, E. Allen, J. Trego, W. W. Rockwell, A. G. Perry, Hugo Linder, John Keifer, Harry Dillon, George Martin, George Hay, William Teuber, William Kennedy, H. Rodiger, Bert Wells, J. Bertenhan, P. Shamer, R. Barclay, E. Bates, B. MacFarlane, W. M. Eversoll. Director, James H. Ward.

DEATH OF ARTHUR W. PORTER

The death of Arthur W. Porter, a leading baritone singer in Washington for many years, came as a great shock to a large circle of friends, pupils and admirers. Mr. Porter came here from Chicago with a brilliant record as a choir and concert singer. He at once took a prominent place in musical affairs, holding the positions of bass soloist in the choirs of St. Aloysius' and St. Patrick's, and taking the solos in oratorio and concert of the best of our musical organizations.

Mr. Porter had the real Italian method, one of the few exponents of that art still working at it. He came from Boston and Chelsea, Mass., and his first teacher in singing was Myron W. Whitney; then went to Paris and Milan, studying for a long time in each place. He settled in Chicago, where he became the baritone soloist in the cathedral, and made a reputation in concert throughout the middle west. He and Mrs. Porter came here about fifteen or eighteen years ago, and he had some of the most successful of our men singers as his pupils, among them John Finnegan, who is soloist at St. Patrick's cathedral in New York; Jack Bowie, Edwin Callow and a number of others. His death was due directly to the heat of last month, but indirectly to an old trouble, diabetes. It occurred at his apartment in the Toronto, and the funeral was held on Tuesday. A male quartet of his pupils, consisting of Jack Bowie and Frank E. Boyer, tenors, and Edwin Callow and Walter T. Matson, sang "Lead, Kindly Light" and "From the Depths."

Mrs. Porter, who has always been associated with her husband in his teaching, will continue the work. She was a successful soloist in Chicago and has his method.

One of the best performances Mr. Porter ever gave here was his singing of the bass solos in Rossini's "Stabat Mater," in the Columbia Theater, some years ago, with the St. Cecilia Society, when Mrs. Annie Grant Fugitt was the soprano and Jack Finnegan took the tenor solos. Mr. Porter's work stood out as a finished and splendid interpretation and performnace, artistic to a degree and in every way one of the most satisfactory performances we can remember. His voice was not young when he came here, but it was wonderfully well preserved, and the good training was very evident.—Washington, D. C.

Mr. Christian is an organist of quite extraordinary ability. His really virtuosic technique is supplemented by his keen understanding and excellent interpretation of the master-works of organ literature. Mr. Christian played Julius Reubke's "Sonata on the 94th Psalm" in recital in the Conservatory, and also studied with me the greater works of J. S. Bach, Franz Liszt, and Max Reger.

MR. LIEBLING'S CONCERT

On last Saturday afternoon the students of Emil Liebling's Summer Institute assembled in great numbers at Kimball Hall to hear an excellent chamber music program.

Mr. Liebling, pianist; David Rosensweet, violinist, and Max Steindel, 'cellist, were heard in the Mendelssohn "Trio," Op. 49, and the "Serenade," Op. 34, No. 1, by Liebling.

The Mendelssohn work, part of which was played to open the program and part to close, was done with extreme musical taste and much refinement of ensemble, while the Liebling work, a musical joy in itself, was made to glow with new beauty in the way in which it was delivered at this time.

Mr. Liebling, in excellent form, played the Beethoven "Sonata," Op. 31, No. 2, with technical skill and musical authority, proving himself an interpretative artist of the best rank, while the work of his little nine-year-old pupil, Josephine Rosensweet, proclaimed him again a teacher par excellence.

This little girl has a very dainty talent and one withal which, under the guidance of the Liebling intelligence, has already developed amazingly and which promises to make her, in the future, a pianist to be reckoned with.

The tone is warm and full, though dainty in texture—the rhythms of the Mozart "Concerto" in D Minor were wonderfully well conserved, while the shading and general musical production were something amazing to hear from such tender years.

Technically Miss Rosensweet has already attained much proficiency and her musical gifts and charms are undeniably great. It is easy enough to predict a great future for her and the audience of Saturday was overjoyed with the fact of being present at the debut of so remarkable a young player.

UNIVERSITY SUMMER CONCERTS

Another distinctive recital of the Chicago University series of concerts was that given by Mlle. Jennie Dufau of the Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Company, Monday evening, August 3, at Mandel Hall. Assisting was Hermann Felber, Jr., violinist, with Leo Sowerby at the piano. Miss Florence Underwood played the accompaniments for Miss Dufau, substituting for Miss Carol Robinson.

The program:

Concerto in B minor ..... Saint-Saens
Allegro non troppo
Mr. Felber

Voci di primavera ..... J. Strauss
Miss Dufau

Adagio ..... Ries
Serenade ..... Randegger
Mr. Felber

Widmung ..... R. Schumann
Les filles de Cadiz ..... Delibes
Miss Dufau

Legend ..... Wieniawski
Zephyr ..... Hubay
Mr. Felber

Voi che sapete ..... Mozart
I List the Trill (from "Natoma") ..... V. Herbert
The Little Gray Dove ..... L. V. Saar
Miss Dufau

Concert on Monday, August 11, will be given by Palmer Christian, organist, and Barbara Wait, contralto.

REINDAHL VIOLINS AND BOWS
VIOLAS and 'CELLOS

Artists know the rarity of violins whose tones are "sweet" from lowest G to A in altissimo. You know how much you desire a violin whose tone qualities are distinguished in power, intensity, brilliance, evenness, sympathy, perfection of open fifths, stopped fifths, thirds, octaves, clear harmonics, pure pizzicato tones, distinct arpeggios, distinct in shake, trill and staccato, and withal quickly responsive to bow-pressure from real pianissimo to fortissimo. If you have such a violin you may not be interested; if you have not, you will be interested in a booklet—"An Artist's Touch"—which I will gladly mail you FREE, and which contains opinions from world famous artists who use

HELENA BINGHAM

Comments on Helena Bingham's "Balloon Man and Other Songs for Children:"

From Streator, Ill.:

Miss Loretta Jackson had selected a group of twenty-two children from her room, who were so delighted with the little songs written by Miss Bingham that they learned them within less than a week.

That the songs are written for children by one who understands and loves little folks was evident to all present. All the more remarkable was the little trio of girls who sang three more of the songs after having had them only one day.

From Keokuk, Iowa:

I like the book very much and am not at all surprised at its success. It is one of the best books for children I know of.—Philip C. Hayden, superintendent music.

From Princeton, Ill.:

Our music supervisor is charmed with "The Balloon Man and Other Songs," and we have added it to our authorized songs for supplementary use.—H E. Waites, superintendent.

From Peru, Ill.:

We are delighted with the songs in your book, "The Balloon Man," etc., and another year our little folks will all be singing them.—James R. Hart, superintendent.

CECIL FANNING

The following comment is from the Berlin "Allgemeine Musikzeitung" of October 4, 1912:

Also, on Monday night the affair at Beethoven Hall was an enjoyable occasion. Cecil Fanning, a young baritone, who made his first appearance before a Berlin audience, is already in the possession of a not inconsiderable artistry, which he can call his own. Besides this, he possesses a very great natural gift for song, aided by great declamatory instinct and a well-grounded technic, which is accomplished without forcing. This was demonstrated in the original setting of "Edward," as well as most of the English songs. Even if these English songs did not come up to what we are accustomed to in Berlin, still, in spite of this, one must admit that Mr. Fanning sang them in a most masterly manner. To a large number present it was perhaps a revelation to hear how beautiful English can sound when it is sung so picturesquely as Mr. Fanning sang it. The antipodes of such songs was that they were sung so sympathetically and beautifully that they won a wonderful success. Debussy's "Romance" could scarcely be sung better. All in all the world of singers has found in Mr. Fanning a superior interpreter, in whose blood seems to be the true essence of song. A musical singer whose forte is not a yell, and whose piano is not a whisper—nowadays not an everyday occurence. At the piano presided Mr. H. B. Turpin, who proved himself a clever and highly musicianly accompanist. (Advertisement.)

ANNA GROFF-BRYANT

The summer normal session held at the Anna Groff-Bryant Institute of Vocal Art and Education closed the six weeks' session on Friday afternoon, August 1, with a song program by Mrs. G. Lyle McLane of Hutchinson, Kan.

Mrs. McLane conducts a branch school of the Anna Groff-Bryant system of vocal education in Hutchinson, and has been here for the entire normal session, bringing ten of her pupils with her, among whom was Homer Hess, one of Hutchinson's promising young tenors, also Viola Graber, the popular young soprano of more than usual promise.

The student body attending the normal session included students of ten years ago, and represented as many states: Kansas, Colorado, California, Iowa, Florida, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Missouri.

Song recitals were given during the session, including opera, and oratorio numbers; classic and modern songs rendered in concert style and action-songs. Artist-pupils taking part were Miss Ethel Belle Reedes, dramatic soprano; Mrs. Darleen Wellington-Miller, dramatic soprano of Albion, Mich., and Mrs. Lillian McKinney of Jacksonville, Fla. Others present conducting branch schools of the Anna Groff-Bryant system of vocal education were, Mrs. John Hampden Creighton of Milwaukee, Miss Corrine Caffery of Kansas City, Kan. Immediately at the close of the service Mrs. Darleen Wellington Miller started upon a six weeks' chautauqua engagement. Mrs. Miller will open a vocal studio in Albion, Mich., early this fall.

THEODORA STURKOW-RYDER

Following is some recent press comment of the press in cities visited by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder:

Minneapolis Daily News, (Harlow Gale).—As a rarely heard novelty the Arensky Concerto was a delight, especially when the piano part was given with such facile grace and romantic power as by Mme. Sturkow-Ryder of Chicago. May this first visit from such a delightful pianist be only the forerunner of a generous series.

Minneapolis Evening Tribune, (Caryl Storrs).—Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is a young artist, but a true one. In soft variations of tonal beauty, and color and pearly rapidity of touch, her performance was delightful, and she showed herself mistress of the difficult Concerto, and of ensemble playing, the latter a rare attribute of soloists of any kind.

The Winnipeg Telegram, Winnipeg, Canada.—The piano numbers of Mme. Sturkow-Ryder were, without a doubt, the gems of the evening. She displays excellent technical equipment, and her intelligence and vivacity won her great applause.

Peoria Star.—Few pianists have been more heartily received than was Theodora Sturkow-Ryder, who played for the Woman's Club. A charming personality combined with a warm musical temperament gives to her vivid interpretations a brilliant setting.

Grand Rapids Press, Grand Rapids, Mich.—Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is one of the most interesting pianists ever heard in this city. An entire program of her work would have been none too much.

The Denver Post, Denver, Colo.—Mme. Theodora Sturkow-Ryder is an unusually fine pianist—she plays with taste, with marked technical intelligence, and manifest individuality. She has the most wonderful dexterity and agile fingering, and she constantly grew in the favor of the audience.

The Gazette, Colorado Springs, Colo.—Mme. Sturkow-Ryder is a pianist of marked talent, and her numbers were enthusiastically received by the audience. They all showed great delicacy and fine musicianship.

Salt Lake City—Theodora Sturkow-Ryder was accorded a hearty welcome, and she played with a fine display of technic and temperament. In the Russian group she especially showed fine musicianship. (Advertisement.)

MAINE NEWS

Many musicians flock to picturesque Maine for the season. Clara Louise Kellogg is at Pine Point, near Old Orchard, for a few weeks.

Anna Louise Carey is spending the summer at the Atlantic House, Scarborough.

Hallowell, Maine, has an orchestra composed of boys which is attracting much attention by their good work.

Prof. Robert W. Douglas has a large summer class at his cottage at Old Orchard. Pupils from all over New England come for coaching under this able teacher and singer. Professor Douglas is to be a member of the opera company at Florence, Italy, this coming season. W. D.

LOUISE BURTON

Some recent press comment is as follows:

Miss Burton disclosed an excellent natural voice, a talent for selecting a program of interesting songs and a talent for interpreting her numbers in an attractive manner.—Chicago Journal.

Miss Burton possesses a beautiful soprano voice which shows the most careful cultivation. She sings with fine feeling and intelligence, her interpretations winning most enthusiastic approval.—Beloit News.

Miss Burton is possed of a charming personality which enters easily and powerfully into her interpretations. In an aria from Charpentier's "Louise," Miss Burton evidenced strongly her great powers, both in beauty and range of voice and in interpretation.—Beloit Free Press.

The program opened with a delightful, though difficult group of songs, but they were sung with an intelligence and ease which, together with a charming personality, succeeded at once in winning every one in the audience to the singer. Miss Burton has a beautiful rich soprano voice, and in her program showed wonderful range and versatility.—Muscatine Journal.

Miss Burton has a sweet, clear, soprano voice with perfect enunciation and an easy, graceful manner that carries her audience with her, and gives them the assurance that she is master of her art.—Aledo Times-Democrat. (Advertisement.)

EVA EMMET WYCOFF

Some recent press comment on the work of Miss Wycoff is as follows:

Miss Wycoff possesses a high soprano voice of beautiful quality, and was most gracious in the rendition of the program. She furnished an afternoon of real enjoyment.—Index, Evanston.

Miss Wycoff with good tone quality and cultivation was easy and well poised in manner and she sang the lovely music with excellent effect.—Democrat, Freehold, N. J.

Miss Wycoff, the soprano soloist, charmed her hearers, and the beauty and compass of her voice allied with a true musical interpretation proved her a concert singer of culture and talent.—Jamesburgh, N. J.

Miss Wycoff has been gifted with a superb voice, pure, clear and sympathetic.—Republican Register, Galesburg, Ill.

Miss Wycoff's voice is truly a dramatic soprano. Her tone quality was excellent. In all her numbers she was highly enjoyed.—Daily Review, Monmouth, Ill.

Miss Wycoff is a charming woman and possesses a lyric soprano voice of unusually wide range and beauty. Miss Wycoff showed herself a true artist.—Evening Report, Lebanon, Pa.

Miss Wycoff's voice is flexible, sonorous, of good quality and well placed. When she sang she was worthy of the compositions she presented us.—Beacon-Journal, Akron, Ohio.

Miss Wycoff's right to be known as an artist was fully demonstrated. She has much personal charm, with a really beautiful voice.—Herald Dispatch, Huntington, W. Va.

Miss Wycoff has a soprano voice of much power and compass.—Toledo, Ohio.

MADAME EDLA LUND

Mme. Edla Lund, who appeared last evening in one of the Summer Night Concerts at the Warren Avenue Congregational Church in Chicago, has just returned from a very successful concert trip in the far west.

Last season she taught voice at the Bessie Tift College in Alabama and for the coming year has accepted a similar position at the Musical Art Institute at Oklahoma City.

Two of the press notices given Mme. Lund during her trip are here reproduced:

The concert by Madame Lund in the auditorium of the Lincoln High School, Wednesday evening, under the auspices of St. James' Lutheran Church, was a well attended and enjoyable affair. Among the noteworthy selections rendered and which proved Madame Lund to be an artist of exceptional ability, were: "With Verdure Clad" (Haydn), a selection of Swedish songs by Grieg and Heise, and a prayer from "Tosca" (Puccini).—Portland (Ore.) Press.

The concert at the Methodist Church last evening was given to a large and appreciative audience. Mrs. Lund's voice was in excellent condition and at this, her second visit to Astoria, added new laurels to her wreath as a great singer that can well be compared to the best ever heard in this city. She sings with a warmth of soul and artistic finish that is rarely heard. Her selections on last night's program were excellent.—Astoria (Cal.) Press.

The Portland program was as follows:

Dawn (Waltz) ..... Strauss
Wednesday Evening Choral Club ..
With Verdure Clad (Creation) ..... Haydn
Madame Lund
Vigeunerwersen (Gipsy Air) ..... Sarasate
Miss Chapman
"Beloved, It Is Morn" ..... Florence Alyward

GRACE HALL RIHELDAFFER

Joseph Augustus Morrow writes thus editorially in his paper, the "News-Sun," of Griffin, Ga., the subject of the sketch being Grace Hall Riheldaffer, the Pittsburgh soprano:

Pittsburgh produces smoke, pig iron, plate glass and politicians galore, but that's not all. That iron-bound, grimy old burg produced Madame Grace Hall Riheldaffer—get that last word straight, for we've spent some time over it—a refined and dainty little lady who has gone forth from her smoky environments to flood the chautauqua world with the sunshine and sweetness of heaven-born song. She has come to Griffin, and Griffin is brighter and better because of her coming. She has won us all with the rare skill and charm of her singing, and hereafter we're willing to forget all the "cold and hard" things about Pittsburgh productions and remember only the warm and winsome impression made by her, the fairest and finest production of which any city could boast.

SOPHIA STEPHALI

This is the comment on the work of Mme. Sofia Stephali, recently printed in the London (Ontario) Advertiser:

PLEADS FOR MUSIC WITH HUMAN APPEAL
—DELIGHTFUL LECTURE-RECITAL
BY MADAME STEPHALI

If you have been wont to confuse the world of art and artists with freaky appearances, overweening, egotistic personalities, and that mild-eyed insanity that is supposed to be the hallmark of genius and greatness, go and hear Sofia Stephali at the Auditorium tonight and you will be delightfully disillusioned. If you have been clinging to the fond belief that art and music exist for the exclusive enjoyment of a few highly-wrought, nervously-strung, neurasthenic, impressionable, finely appreciative temperamentalists, Madame Stephali will cruelly and rudely shock you. She is a really accomplished artist. Were the standards of art in vogue today more moral and sane, she would be at once acclaimed as a great artist. Or if, on her part, she would compromise by adopting some little freakiness of personality that the musical highbrows would deign to accept as the olive branch of peace, undoubtedly the elect would rave over her, audiences would crowd to hear her, and her fame would grow like that of De Pachman and Paderewski. But she chooses instead to dress with perfect taste, without the least affectedness and to use her beautiful and clear mezzo-soprano voice in singing well chosen selections in a way that everyone can understand.

Most of her songs are sung in English, and one knows from her first words that they are in English. The question which a musical audience usually has to decide before it can begin to appreciate a song, namely, whether the singer is singing in pidgin English, old French, modified Sicilian or simple Bulgarian, is obviated at once when Stephali begins to sing.

It will be difficult for the culturists and others who believe in art for art's sake, whatever that may mean, to forgive her for her extremely rude, evangelistic zeal in attempting to interest the everyday, bourgeois classes in music.

"We need more music and better music, music that is closer to life," said Stephali. "We want less ragtime and more life-time music. We want simple, lovely songs, discarding on the one hand the elaborate and affected, and on the other the worthless and the meaningless."

The program was happily chosen, simple, beautiful and harmonious. "Ever on Earth," by Robert Just, a Chicago composer, is an exquisitely beautiful piece. The adverb "exquisitely" is used not with malice but with forethought. "Down in Nod-a-way," by Gaynor, is a petite, lilting, dancing refrain, which the versatile, unaffected and natural Stephali well knows how to interpret. Bond's "A Perfect Day" was simply and delightfully rendered. In Meyerbeer's "Deer Prophet," scene cavatine and aria, Stephali admirably pictures forth the warring of the primal, God-implanted emotions of the mother's heart with the stinging consciousness of a son's ingratitude. Her rendering of De Pinna's "Gaily Chant the Summer Birds" thrills with the wholesome melody of forests and wild songsters, and breathes the sweetness of meadow flowers and the freedom and unaffected joyousness of the sunshine.

Wholesome art, music with a human appeal, harmonious life and joyous, natural living; of these things Stephali is the prophetess, the forerunner, the sane, useful dreamer, who not only dreams but sings, and judging from her cordial and delightful personality, also lives her message.

THE EDWARD MAC DOWELL MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION

The Edward MacDowell Memorial Association announces a music festival on the Forest Pageant stage and in the Town Hall, Peterborough, New Hampshire, August 21, 22, 23 and 24, 1913. The Boston Festival Orchestra and the Peterborough MacDowell Choral Club under the direction of Mr. E. G. Hood will be assisted by the following artists: Miss Hazel Milliken of Nashua, soprano; Mrs. Monica Graham Stultz of Chicago, soprano; Mr. Charles Hackett of New York, tenor; Mr. Harold Henry of Chicago, pianist, and Mr. Reinald Werrenrath of New York, baritone. A feature of the festival will be a program of American compositions conducted by the composers.

RUTH ALTA ROGERS

Some comment on the work of Ruth Alta Rogers, the young American pianist, is as follows:

Her program ranged from the severely classical music of Bach to that of the modern composers. Her technic proved ample for the requirements of the difficult music she played, and her interpretation left nothing to be desired. Miss Rogers is gifted with the emotional temperament, but she has it under the splendid discipline of a mind well trained by thorough education and experience. Her playing was characterized by absolute steadiness of rhythm, unerring technic and artistic interpretation. One who commented said: "Her playing is so melodious"—which is true; but there was no lack of power and breadth.—Ripon (Wis.) Commonwealth.

An admirable reading, colored with feeling and marked authority, was given Grieg's sonata. A group of three Chopin numbers, to the first of which (the "E Major Nocturne") she gave a singularly sympathetic and dreamy interpretation, while the "Mazurka" and "Scherzo" offered a brilliant contrast, formed the concluding numbers. In "Carillon" (Oldberg), Miss Rogers simulated remarkably the sound of chiming bells. Minneapolis Tribune.

A pianist of unusual ability, Miss Ruth Alta Rogers, opened the program with the Grieg sonata. She imparted to the work a rugged force that is possible only to an artist who has the instrument well in hand, and played the minuet movement, especially, with excellent style. Oldberg's "Carillon" . . . displayed a remarkably sensitive control of fingers and keyboard.—St Paul Pioneer Press.

Ferguson.—Mrs. J. E. Ferguson, a well known soprano, and for a time very active in club circles in Gary, was recently elected president of the Gary Musical Club, succeeding Mrs. J. A. White.

LIZZIE ABBOTT CLARK

Some comment on the work of Mrs. Clark is as follows:

March 15, a recital was given by the faculty of Balatka Musical College, in Handel Hall, Le Moyne Building. Most of the faculty are well known to the Chicago public, but a very important addition to its number has been made since the last recital was given.

Mrs. Lizzie Abbott Clark, a mezzo-soprano whose singing is a delight and whose ability as a teacher is finding daily recognition, is an addition to the corps who stand among the leadng musical educators of the city.

Mrs. Clark is a sister of the late Emma Abbott, who sung herself into the hearts of the American public as few American artists have done and her technic and manner bring pleasant reminiscences of the sweet singer who all too early laid down her laurels.—Chicago Illustrated Review.

Music lovers were furnished a treat this afternoon at the reception to the Illinois Woman's Press Association given by Mrs. Charles H. Sergel, 4578 Oakenwald avenue.

The musical part of the program was furnished by Mrs. L. Abbott Clark, younger sister of Emma Abbott, who charmed the public in days gone by. Mrs. Clark rendered the following selections: "The Wanderer," "Hedge Roses," and "Who Is Sylvia?" by Schubert; "Les Filles de Cadiz," by Delibes; "The Dawn," by D'Hardelot; "Where Corals Lie" and "In Haven," by Edward Elgar; "Quando a te Lieta" and "The Flower Song" from "Faust," and "Voi Che Sapete" from "The Marriage of Figaro."

Mrs. Sergel talked about pictures which she brought from Italy recently.—Chicago Evening American. (Advertisement.)

MARTHA S. STEELE

Following is some press comment on the singing of Martha S. Steele, dramatic contralto, of Pittsburgh:

Martha S. Steele, soloist with the Pittsburgh Festival Orchestra, acquitted herself with power and effect in the several roles which she essayed.—Weekly Herald, Sewickley, Pa.

Martha S. Steele has a rich contralto voice, and her singing gave great pleasure.—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

Martha S. Steele has a contralto voice of exceptionally good quality and range.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

It has been my pleasure to accompany Mrs. Steele and I am glad to speak of her beautiful voice. It is rich and powerful and when singing Mrs. Steele throws beauty into the music with delightful abandon. —Virgil Piano School, New York, Robert C. Young.

Martha S. Steele has given eminent satisfaction in her interpretation of my compositions. Her rendition of "Sayonara" has given her hearers great pleasure. Mrs. Steele has a voice of rich quality and handles it in a musicianly way.—Charles Wakefield Cadman.

Allow me to express my sincerest admiration for your singing at the recent Festival Orchestra concert; especially the "Samson and Delilah" aria, was beautifully done. With best wishes for your continued success.—Carl Bernthaler, conductor, Pittsburgh Festival Orchestra.

CHARLES E. LUTTON

Mr. Charles E. Lutton, a favorite baritone, has many engagements for the coming season. Some of his press notices read as follows:

There is a snap and a go and a rollicking realism about his "Zummerzetshire."—Eugene Ore, Sunday Record.

Mr. Lutton sang "Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves" (Handel) splendidly, his enunciation being perfect.—Sunday Oregonian, Portland, Ore.

Mr. Lutton sang the part of the Druid priest in the "First Walpurgis Night" with the Evanston Musical Club, with clear conception of the character of the music.—Evanston Index.

Mr. Charles E. Lutton, a young baritone who is coming forward splendidly, sang Armstrong's "The Road" and Clarke's "Ladies of St. James" capitally His voice is big and virile and he handles it with authoritative certainty. He was at his very best in the humorous "Zummerzetshire" song used as encore. —Music News, Chicago.

GRANT KIMBELL

Mr. Kimbell is fulfilling many important chautauqua engagements through the summer.

Some of his notices for the past season read as follows:

"STABAT MATER"—ORCHESTRA HALL

Grant Kimbell sang the "Cujus Animam" with good tone and convincing style. This young singer has a voice that will warrant him a career.—Musical Courier, Chicago.

"MESSIAH"

Mr. Kimbell gave his solos with much tonal beauty and in good oratorio style, which means they were sung with reverent feeling and dignity. If there is one thing we like more than another about Mr. Kimbell's work, it is his evident sincerity of purpose.—Music News, Chicago.

"SWAN AND SKYLARK" (GORING-THOMAS)

Mr. Kimbell's work was par excellence. His voice is a beautiful tenor of splendid range. He has temperament and displayed many novel effects in the work. His shading, accent and handling of tempos revealed the thought and study expended in mastering these intricacies. In short, it was a most artistic performance.—Record-Herald, Indianola, Ia.

"IN A PERSIAN GARDEN" (LEHMANN)

Mr. Kimbell has a strong, clear tenor voice which he controls exceedingly well. He is one of the best tenors we have had here.—Baldwin, Kansas (Baker Orange).

"REBEKAH" (BARNBY)

Mr. Kimbell is the possessor of a beautiful voice which has the appealing, sympathetic quality: the kind of voice which one instinctively likes.—Wisconsin State Journal, Madison.

"TRIUMPH OF DAVID" (BUCK)

Mr. Kimbell is the possessor of a tenor voice of beautiful quality and virile power, and he delivered two arias in a dignified and sympathetic manner.—La Grange (Ill.) Press.

LETTERS TO EFFA ELLIS

My Dear Miss Ellis:—Your work has proved a mental awakening that no other study has ever done for me. The foundation principle of the system is a truth that will apply to the teaching of anything.

I can never thank you enough for getting me interested in taking the course.

Very sincerely,

(Signed) LYDIA WORTH SMITH.

Pupil of D. A. Clippinger, Chicago; Madam Cheney, New York City; head of children's department of Freemantel Music School, Omaha.

Omaha, Neb.

Dear Miss Ellis:—One thing I like about your work is that it is so interesting to the children, and grownups as well. I had one little pupil who liked the work so well that she not only came to her own class but to other classes. She has been an inspiration to the others.

I am so glad that I took your system when I did, and only regret that I did not take it up sooner. Yours sincerely,

(Signed) MARGARET JUDGE,
Organist St. John's Church.
Teacher of piano and harmony.

Omaha, Neb.

WILLETT PUPILS

Miss Mary McFie, who has been studying during the summer with Mr. Willett, has returned to resume her position as Dean of Music at the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque.

Mr. Harry A. Faulkner of Chicotah, Okla., who spent the summer coaching with Mr. Willett returns August 11 to resume his teaching.

THE BREIL OPERA COMPANY

Music News recently received a very interesting "Prospectus" of the Breil Opera Company, sent out by Joseph Carl Breil from 1482 Broadway, New York. This, in very elaborate detail, explains the plans of an organization which promises to solve many of the difficulties which beset the young opera singer in his first efforts toward making suitable appearances. The circular is too long to be given in detail here but copies of it will be sent on application to Mr. Breil. (Advertisement.)

Editorial

SOME EDITORIAL COMMENT ON THE N. A. O.

Prominent above all other considerations at the convention last week at Ocean Grove was the fact that such a very successful affair could have come out of such a discouraging year—proving conclusively that the best that is in a man or a convention is brought to the surface by opposition. The remarkable endorsement given the officers of last year and their enthusiastic re-election are proof enough that their work has been splendid.

The next significant fact was the acceptance (tentatively) of the invitation to meet at the Pan-American Exposition in San Francisco in 1915. This proves conclusively that the Association, though as yet so largely eastern in the complexion of its officers, has no intention of remaining always in the east, even though it was decided to hold the meeting of 1914 at Ocean Grove. This last decision was most wise, for the Association is not yet strong enough to bear transplanting and no other place in the country could possibly be so fine as is Ocean Grove from every pleasurable standpoint. Besides, it costs so little to hold the convention at the Jersey resort, for there are buildings in plenty which are given freely and not only is a great organ in the Auditorium available for use, but for the last convention at least, the fine instrument in the M. E. Church at Asbury Park was also available without cost or hindrance.

Another notable feature of the convention was the fact that it developed such a wonderful loyalty in the members—those who have been such since the inception of the Association, as also some whose membership does not extend back so far.

It is this loyalty which built up the Association originally, has recouped its fortunes during the past year and will certainly see to it that no opposition of the future shall wreck its usefulness.

AFTERMATH

Several points which were discussed at the Ocean Grove convention of the N. A. O., are still open for remark, and although the innate modesty of a newspaper man may prevent his saying these things at the time, he always has his chance to say them afterward.

Mr. McAll said that every organist should be capable of improvization; Mr. Armstrong said that in much church going throughout the world he had found the impromptu offertory a bore. This writer also has suffered from the same cause and has no hesitation in saying that ninety-nine hundredths of all the extempore playing he has ever heard (and it is considerable) has been senseless meandering. * * * *

Each guarantor of the fund for the N. A. O. paper is allowed to send in 40 new subscriptions; the suggestion was made that these be sent largely to members of church music committees. To this Music News says "amen" and adds the further suggestion that a fund be started in each church whereby one member of each such committee be sent to Ocean Grove next summer. He would certainly learn something.

Mr. Hill insisted that the daily papers in Boston were a great help to the upbuilding of music in that city. If this is really true they should be studied by the managers of the Chicago dailies, for in the latter named city there is very slight pride in local musical development, the space which should be devoted to this civic asset being given unconditionally to the foreigners.

The two "bones of contention," the free organ recital and the vulgar (musically speaking) gospel hymn, will come up again next year. The latter will be offensive to the real musician always and may pall on the general public in course of time; the former will always remain a question to be settled in each locality separately. No General Edict can ever settle the matter for Individual Cases, but even though churches or municipalities deem it wise to give free concerts the organist should always be paid; and if he ever gives free concerts at all it should be wholly and frankly for the purpose of self advertisement.

It is not a duty he owes to any community.

———♯♯♯———

THE DIFFICULTY OF SIMPLICITY

It is hard to acquire transcendent technic in any line of music art—very, very hard; and countless thousands have worn their lives out in the endeavor.

It is also extremely difficult to translate the meanings of the compositions of master minds and to transmit them to an audience.

But far more difficult is it to master the art of simplicity either by the composer or the performer.

To write a perfect gem of a composition, be it ever so small in form and size is the mark of a true genius, and to be able to present such a work simply, sincerely and convincingly is the acme of art. Few indeed can do it, and fewer still care to exercise themselves to learn the secret.

MANY IMPORTANT BOOKINGS FOR HAROLD HENRY

Many important bookings have been made for Harold Henry for next season. On November 5, he will give a recital for the Dauphin Institute, Toledo, Ohio.

———♯♯♯———

Bevitt.—Mrs. E. D. Bevitt of Muskogee, Okla., who is substituting for Elias Bredin at the First Presbyterian Church in Evanston, was in attendance at the Convention of the N. A. O. at Ocean Grove, the past week.

Music News

The Organists' Convention

REPORTED BY CHARLES E. WATT AT OCEAN GROVE

The beginning, as far as Music News is concerned, was on a broiling Saturday afternoon in the B. & O. station, and the first twelve hours were spent uncomfortably enough in crossing the flat and uninteresting states of Indiana and Ohio (scenically speaking, of course). But, after Pittsburgh was passed, the real delights of the "picturesque B. & O." came to the front and the Sunday afternoon and evening through the mountains and over the historic ground of Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia was delightful.

Philadelphia next afforded historical delight for a few hours, and the trip was completed by a dirty, hot and generally disagreeable ride over the Central Railroad of New Jersey, as miserably a conducted railroad as one can find in the country.

The discomfort of this trip was soon forgotten, however, in the delights of Ocean Grove and Asbury Park, and the week spent there was a succession of pleasures, the chief ingredient in which was the ever-changing and the all-insistent ocean, a factor which to an inlander makes Ocean Grove a wonderful experience and which is the strongest argument which can be used for the meeting of the convention being at this point.

The largest attendance yet known in the association was called to order on Monday afternoon by President Christopher Marks, and his address of welcome was one of splendid preparation and fine content.

Throughout the meetings Mr. Marks presided with dignity, and the illuminative flashes which were let in upon many moot questions by his personality and experience proved to be acceptable always and highly helpful also.

Mr. Marks' Address

The address of the president is given here entire, being reproduced from the Asbury Park Press:

Ladies and Gentlemen, Members of the National Association of Organists:—It is with the greatest pleasure that I stand before you today to welcome you to this, our sixth annual convention. A pleasure, because we are to have the best convention in the history of our association. A pleasure, because during the past year we have had experiences that threatened the very life of the organization, and at one time it looked as if it would be impossible to repair the damage done by one man—a man who had been elected by this organization to a position of prominence, of trust and of honor.

I am not going to dwell on those dark days. The last convention did not see fit to re-elect its former secretary and treasurer, and editor of our then official paper, the Musical World. He left three days before the close of the convention, taking with him all the money collected for dues, making it necessary for one individual to pay out of his own pocket several necessary bills contracted on account of the convention. He published in our paper, the Musical World, a so-called "report" of the convention, leaving out entirely the names of the new officers, thereby carrying the impression that the former officers had been re-elected. In fact, he declared that the headquarters would be located in Chicago, and instructed the members to send their dues to him, which many in ignorance of the facts, did.

He refused to deliver to the new officers of the association the books and lists of membership. He secured incorporation papers for a society called "The National Association of Organists of America" and the words "of America" were printed so small that they could hardly be noticed, or they were left out altogether. He went so far as to threaten our National committee with legal proceedings unless we conformed to his individual wishes. Mail matter addressed to and intended for the National Association of Organists is still delivered to him at Chicago. I have just seen an advertisement in an English musical paper carrying out the impression that the National Association of Organists is still in his office in Chicago. Such conduct seems incredible and I certainly cannot believe that any organist in America, Canada or England could knowingly give his approval and support to anyone guilty of such conduct.

Without a dollar in the treasury and without a shadow of a list of members, your National committee began a campaign of protest, or enlightenment and of reorganization. All the musical journals of this country without a single exception, gave us the free use of their columns. The Musical Courier, Musical America, the Musical Leader, Mr. Watt through his "Music News," the Diapason, the Musical Observer, Musical Monitor, the official organ of the Woman's Musical clubs, and the organ department of the New York Evening Post, all gave the greatest possible publicity to our work and exposed the bold attempt to destroy our organization.

I assure you that for the past four months your committee has had a busy time of it. The publication of our new official organ, the N. A. O. News has done more than anything else in making this convention a success, and in bringing the organization to a higher standard than it has known. New membership tickets have been sent out. Mistakes have been corrected. Hundreds of new members have been enrolled. From the "Blue List" of association members we are going to receive thousands of regular active members.

The future presents a bright outlook. The National Association of Organists today is better known than ever before. The daily and local papers throughout the nation have given us columns of publicity. Organists in every state have been stirred to enthusiasm. There is a spirit of confidence and determination in evidence everywhere.

This convention is greatly indebted to the program committee, and specially to Arthur Scott Brook for the excellent program prepared for this convention and for the exhibits that will be made by organ builders and music publishers. This is only a beginning of much greater things.

A word about the holding again of the convention at Ocean Grove. You remember that the last convention decided to hold the August meeting at Buffalo. When we came face to face with the situation, with no money, with no membership list, and without a word of invitation or assurance from the organists of Buffalo, or from any other musical organization, we simply did not dare to proceed. Mr. Morgan was invited to attend our committee meeting, and he reminded us that the invitation given by Dr. Ballard, the president of the Ocean Grove association, to hold the convention there was still good, and while he could not either attend or do anything for a Buffalo convention, he could give free use of public buildings at Ocean Grove, and could advertise the meetings in connection with the regular summer program. There was nothing else to do. We grasped the offer. It gave new life to our committee. Mr. Morgan consented to act as national superintendent until this convention. That is the reason we are back again to Ocean Grove. As to future meetings, the matter is entirely in the hands of this convention.

In closing permit me to express my grateful thanks to the men and women who have so loyally stood by me during the past year; our Executive Committee, of which Frederick Schlieder is enthusiastic chairman, has spared neither time nor trouble, and very many meetings have been held during the past year. We have been extremely fortunate in having such splendid officers as Walter H. Waters, secretary, and Chester H. Beebe, treasurer, both of whom have worked unsparingly and have given much time and thought to our association. But to our esteemed and energetic national superintendent, Tali Esen Morgan, we owe a very special and sincere vote of thanks, for the tremendous amount of enthusiastic service which he has voluntarily rendered on all occasions, and we all greatly appreciate his counsel and assistance. It has been a great honor to me to act as president of the N. A. O. and I assure you that I have done everything in my power for the welfare and for the upbuilding of the organization.

The first real formality of the convention took place at 4:30 in the afternoon when Mr. Arthur H. Turner, organist of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church at Springfield, Mass., gave a splendid organ recital on the unique Austin organ in the Methodist Episcopal Church at Asbury Park.

Throughout the convention this organ was used daily and not only was the generosity and friendliness of the church proven in this way but the musical delight of the convention was also much enhanced—for, this organ is a most beautifully toned one and it proved, throughout the week, to have an ample variety of effects for the very wonderfully chosen programs which were given.

Mr. Turner, a pupil of Guilmant, is also a singer of distinction and has been mentioned in many connections musically. His success as an organist is a great one and his recital was fine beyond the vast majority of these functions.

The chief characteristic of his choice of works and also of his presentment of them lay in a certain boldness and incisiveness which abounded throughout his hour at the organ. Such massing of tone and such breadth of treatment in Creseendo are but seldom encountered and in the Parker "Fugue" the outline was kept almost brazenly clear. This is not spoken slightingly but in compliment, for the Parker intention was evidently to make this movement wonderfully broad—almost brutally so, and Mr. Turner faithfully gave his interpretation.

This was not the only kind of work done by him, however, and the charm and daintiness of certain other moments of the program were offset beautifully by the humor and piquancy of others.

The "Sonata" (Horatio Parker, Op. 65) is a glorious work, it has variety and intelligence in it and was so considered and interpreted by Mr. Turner. Bairstow's "Evening Song" is original and was played with great freedom of interpretation. The Ferrata "Nocturne" (A flat), proved to be a piece of lovely concept and was given with compelling effectiveness in tone manipulation, while the "Allegro" from a "Symphony," by Maquaire, a "Concert Caprice," by Kreiser, and the "Finlandia," Tone Poem, by Sibelius, served to fill out a program of rare value and to furnish Mr. Turner opportunities for bravoura playing of exceptional kind and degree.

Reception at the Arlington

In the evening a reception was given at the Arlington Hotel, one of the curiosities of Ocean Grove in-as-much as its parlor, is in imitation of a Mississippi steamboat (its owner once having been Captain on such a boat) and on two decks (or floors) a circle of bedrooms have their doors opening out onto this general meeting ground, where indeed the organists met and felicitated each other with much gusto.

There was no program but a very pleasant evening was spent in "getting acquainted." Among those present were noted Mrs. Julian Edwards and Laura Sedgwick Collins of New York; also Mr. Driggs of the firm of Driggs and Messina, and Mr. Williamson of the Saturday Evening Post of the same city. Mr. Tali Esen Morgan was late in arriving on acount of another engagement (a "Messiah" rehearsal to be exact), but when he did arrive the warmth of the reception given him showed in no unmistakable way that the organists present appreciate his unselfish efforts in behalf of the conventions and the great amount of detail work he has done to make them possible.

Tuesday

The morning session was opened in the Memorial Tabernacle and drew a splendid attendance. Three papers were read, the subjects being "The Essential Elements of Churchly Music," "Development of the Spiritual in the Music of the Church," and "The Advantages of the Vested Choir." The speakers being Dr. A. Madeley Richardson, organist of the South Reformed Church, New York; Dr. J. S. Van Cleve, New York, and Miss Henrietta Osborne Crane of Baltimore.

Dr. Richardson, who is a man with international reputation as an organist, and an authority on Church Music, and who, besides being a graduate of Oxford, was for many years organist at a cathedral in London, gave a most comprehensive paper, dealing very pointedly with the subject of music in the Episcopal Church and pointing out convincingly many errors in the present modes of chanting.

The Idealist and the Dreamer were said by Dr. Richardson to be the real forces in music and likewise, in actuality—the most practical.

A quotation from very ancient authority to the effect that "In every undertaking the end should be considered" was construed to mean that not only high ideals should be conserved but that also absolute practicality should be kept in mind.

In the church only high grade compositions should be used, and these should be presented only by people thoroughly trained and always in the absolutely best way from the churchly standpoint.

No opera or other exotic growth in music should be used under any circumstances and the Choral idea should be considered always as absolutely higher in effectiveness than the Solo.

In dealing with Monotone and Chant, Dr. Richardson said that these were merely idealized forms of "spoken word," and that therefore any rules which made the words unintelligibe or which accented the words in ways foreign to natural speech were incorrect. His whole plea, reinforced by much practical illustration, was for simplicity, directness and sincerity.

To a question from Mr. Van Cleve as to whether the English language could be enunciated equally clearly with the Latin tongues Mr. Richardson detailed much personal experience which went to prove that it could. His contention was that the reason English singing is unintelligible is that the English text, either spoken or sung, is so generally maltreated that it has lost its distinction. This statement was corroborated by several other speakers and Mr. Harding made a most earnest plea for purity of diction, while Mrs. Summers was eloquent in her demand for education of the public along the lines of church music essentials. Illuminative comment was also given by Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. Van Cleve, immediately following, reinforced much that had been said by Dr. Richardson and was particularly eloquent throughout his address, embellishing it with touches of poesy and lighting it up also with humor very often.

According to Dr. Van Cleve church music should be considered wholly from the standpoint of worship. The soloist as such, has no place—display of all kinds are absolutely incorrect. Spirituality being the sum and substance of all that is attempted.

Spirituality, however, includes many phases and even as Nature alternates day and night, summer and winter, and even as our life experiences include joy and sorrow, ups and downs—even so must music of the church be very wide in its mood painting. Dr. Van Cleve believes in the terrible and the sorrowful. He thinks that the church must present the thought of retribution and that the music must emphasize it. He also believes that sorrow is good for the soul and that at a funeral there should be much solemnity—not a vapid effort to gloss the sorrow over with trivial music, but a deep consideration of the dreadful fact of death. In presenting all these phases, however, he insisted on co-operation between the pulpit and the choir loft and pointed out the incongruity of the anthem being about the "Joys of Heaven," followed immediately with a sermon on "The Terrors of Hell."

This brought up the question of incongruities in general and many samples were cited. Mr. Van Cleve told of a young woman in Cincinnati who sang a florid offertory, ending with an elaborate trill, accompanied by operatic mannerisms and claimed that this constituted such a breach of church suitability as to be notable, unless indeed it was overshadowed by the quartet of young men from Oberlin who sang "There is a Fountain Filled with Blood" to an adaptation of the "Love Death," from "Tristan and Isolde," a combination of religious exaltation with perfervid earthly passion which was shocking.

"Invictus," by Hahn, was also quoted as a positively incongruous church piece, the sentiment of the text being absolutely pagan in effect and many humoreskes were cited, mal-a-prop-isms, which, while amusing, were much deplored by various speakers. Mrs. Summer's idea of "Education, Education, Education" of the public being applauded again and again.

Enunciation again came in for discussion and after stating his high ideal that "every word sung in the choir loft should be as understandable as every word spoken from the pulpit." Mr. Van Cleve was reinforced by other speakers who declared the ideal a possibility, citing Heinrich and Adelina Patti as singers who were actually able to "speak" to their audiences.

Miss Crane followed in a short and very practical paper in which she answered various questions which had previously been propounded.

According to her ideas the choir of men and boys is the only really effective church music and absolute reverence and suitability should be predominant. Her talk was wholly from the Episcopalian standpoint, but was intensely interesting to everyone present.

Eight "picked and paid" voices, supplemented by sixteen volunteers is her idea of a perfect choir and the details of vestment and various formulae and ritual were very exactly explained. Miss Crane admitted that women were much more "timid" than men, but insisted that they were infinitely more "practical." She certainly proved herself a mine of information and a thoroughly interesting speaker.

Afternoon

The convention of the afternoon was held on the stage of the Auditorium and was opened by Mr. Robert M. Treadwell, organist of the Temple of Labor in New York, and whose subject, "My Brother Organist," was treated practically and with much distinction. The trials of the new organist in any field and the possibilities of ameliorating his lonely plight were well treated, and a very spirited lot of short addendas were made by Messrs. Turner, Marks and Van Cleve.

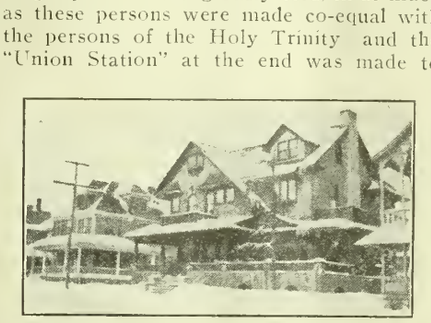
Dr. William A. Wolf of Lancaster, Pa., next appeared and gave a comprehensive paper on "Music of the Moravian Church," in which the historical part of the subject was treated in a masterly manner and the poetical and spiritual significances of the Moravian music were dwelt upon with emphasis.

The subject of this paper is so strange to most musicians that a complete reading of it would be the only answer as to what its content really was.

The extremely religious and absolutely fine musical trend of the Moravian Church music were beautifully illustrated by the playing of characteristic chants, hymns and chorales by Clarence Reynolds at the great organ of the Auditorium.

Dr. Wolf prefaced his paper with an indignant arraignment of E. S. Lorenz, whose "Defense of Gospel Hymns" had just appeared in the "Green Sheet" of Ocean Grove.

After reading the article to the convention, Mr. Wolf disposed of it most effectively by reading two hymns; the first of these was taken from one of the "Gospel Hymnals" of the day, one in great practical use, in which the "Journey of Life" was described as a railroad trip, wherein the disturbances of the road and the duties of "conductor" and "brakeman" were most vulgarly and sacreligiously told, in-as-much as these persons were made co-equal with the persons of the Holy Trinity and the "Union Station" at the end was made to stand for heaven, with God, the Father, in the part of "Station Master." A shocking piece of insolent sacrilege.



RESIDENCE OF TALI ESEN MORGAN AT OCEAN GROVE

The other hymn, from the Moravian list, supposedly, also typified the Journey of Life, but in this the weary traveler was always cheered by the presence of the comforter, and at the end he enters the "Home land" with a "welcome" from the "Loving Father."

The letter from Mr. Lorenz is here reproduced:

I am in full sympathy with any movement that will lift up the downtrodden and oppressed, especially if they are church organists. And any movement that proposes to make that large and conspicuous class more efficient is sure to call forth a hearty "Amen!" from me. Unfortunately our July issues are already in print and our August issues appear too late to do you any service.

I see that the usual "punching bag" of Metropolitan organists—the Gospel Song—is to be pummeled as usual. One would imagine the sport to be a little stale, but it seems to have perennial charm for the New Yorkers, and since they enjoy it, one can play with one's mustache and so hide the smile of amusement over their futile and rather mechanical mental gymnastics. Why not organize an organists' broom brigade to sweep back the Atlantic ocean and prevent those vulgar tides?

This is not sarcasm; it is supposed to be genial satire.

That reminds me! Most of these musical "bag punchers" are Englishmen, or at least lay stress on English ideals. Is it their idea of English fair play to denounce and condemn with heated and lurid rhetoric a cause whose representatives they are afraid to invite to defend their cause? To denounce composers behind their backs is not considered "good form" in England any more than it is in vulgar America.

Pardon the apparent criticism of your program. I am very much interested in the improvement of church music and feel that with all its superficial weaknesses and foibles, your organization is likely to do good. So I wish you well, and send my annual fee, in spite of my amused smile.

E. S. LORENZ.

Organ Recitals

Just after these papers, Mr. Clarence Reynolds was heard in one of his daily organ recitals, which are a great feature at Ocean Grove.

He has a list of just one hundred standard and popular numbers from which many "requests" are played daily.

Certainly the very complicated organ at the Auditorium presents no terrors to Mr. Reynolds and his musicianship is thoroughly convincing while his temperament and idealism are unquestioned.

On Tuesday he was heard in the Boccherini "Minuet," "Pilgrims Chorus" (Wagner); "Largo" (Handel); "Prelude to Parsifal," and his own remarkable "Storm" comment on which will be made in another place.

Mae Sutton, a soprano of beautiful voice and also one which is powerful enough for the immense spaces it was asked to fill, sang with much distinction a florid work

Mr. Chace in Recital

Because of the unavoidable absence of Dr. Noble, Dr. Frank Wilbur Chace of Sewickley, formerly of Seattle, came bravely to the front and played a remarkably fine program in a splendid way at the Asbury Church at 4:30.

The B-A-C-H "Fugue" of Liszt was distinguished in conception and delivery as were also thoroughly representative works of Noble, Widor and Wolstenholme, these being a "Solemn Prelude," a movement from the "Fourth Symphony," and the "Andante and Finale" in B flat.

Horsman's "Curfew" was played with rare beauty, Guilmant's "March Funebre and Chant Seraphique" were made eloquent, a North Dakota "Sketch," by Lemare, proved novel and interesting, the "Meditation Religeuse" of Decq was charmingly played and a short piece by Nevin was much admired in the exquisite presentment of Dr. Chace.

This organist has temperament and technic equally mated and his recital was one of the high lights of the convention.

A Lawn Party

Mrs. Bruce S. Keator, organist of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Asbury Park, and one of the most charming figures of the convention, opened her beautiful home on Tuesday evening to the convention with a lawn party and a reception, which was one of the most pleasurable functions ever known to the body of musicians present. A program delightfully breezy and thoroughly in keeping was given by the following artists: Mrs. Edith Halle Frank, Mrs. Walter Hubbard, Miss Florence Cavanagh, Miss Mae Sutton, Miss J. Seldridge, Miss Marguerite Crowell, Miss Mary Lamson Leech, Mrs. Garcia, Mrs. Lewis (reader); Mr. Arthur H. Turner accompanist; violin and piano, Mrs. Geo. Hamlin, Miss Isabel Baylawski.

Wednesday Morning

The Wednesday morning session was presided over by Dr. Homer Bartlett, one of the vice presidents of the association, and was held at the Methodist Episcopal Church in Asbury Park, where the fine organ was found invaluable in demonstrating many of the interesting problems propounded.

The session was devoted to a symposium on "Church Music of the Congregational Type," which was presided over by Reginald Lee McAll, organist of the Church of the Covenant in New York. His remarks were eloquent and at the same time witty and humorous to an unusual degree and he managed the morning so deftly that much of practical significance was evolved.

Mr. McAll started the ball rolling by telling what an organist should be, i.e., technically fine and musically broad, including even a theoretical and practical development of the power of improvization, and branched immediately from this phase to the congregation, which he said must be responsive in order to be at all worth while.

Illustrating this he told the story of the railroad company which advertised for several hundred "wooden sleepers." A minister responding to this advertisement offered his "entire congregation at a bargain."

The proper playing and singing of Hymns was then taken up and Mr. McAll concentrated some time on the effort to find out how best to allow for that inelasticity of any congregation which makes metronomic adherence to rhythm an impossibility.

Mr. L. K. LeJune, St. Stephens, New York, played several hymns illustrative of his theory of a definite "break" and consequent loss of "time" at the end of each phrase, and was followed by Mr. Fred Schleider of the St. Nicholas Collegiate Church, who explained his theory of a "curve" in the rhythm, which, sifted down meant nothing more than an artistic elasticity, managed by crescendo and decrescendo with a little "catch" at the end of the phrase, but which, as illustrated at the organ by Mr. Schlieder, was beautiful indeed and which brought forth a storm of applause.

Mr. McAll further named as one of the requirements of a good organist that he should actually be a singer, that he should develop the concert possibilities of his instrument, that he must study every sort of service, must acquire a library of hymnals "honorably, if possible," and that in training his choir he must understand to a nicety the proper tempos to be taken, varying even with the size of his Auditoriums. In all singing the poetry must be given due attention and voice requirements must be considered even by the church music composer, for instance, an anthem was mentioned in which the tenor is asked to deliver "Praise the Lord" on tones ranging to low G, the comment on this by a testy old choir leader being "Doesn't the man know that a tenor cannot praise the Lord below middle C."

Mr. Moritz E. Schwarz, organist of Trinity Church in New York, and supervisor of music in the public schools of Jersey City, contributed as his part of the symposium, "The Congregations of the Future," speaking first of public school music teaching as it had been in the days when there was no grading, the pupils being taught year after year according to the caprice of the new teacher and with no regard to what had proceeded and when the principle admonition of the teacher was to "sing up." When "monotones" were allowed to remain such and repertoire consisted of some few and valueless "rote songs."

This he followed by a description of what is actually being done today in the Jersey City schools and which is unquestionably on a par, if not superior to that done anywhere.

Rudiments are now taught progressively according to a most carefully studied grading and actual results are conserved rather than the parrot-like learning either of rudiments or songs.

Memorizing and part singing are developed and the result is that high school pupils of this system are fully ready to step into choir work in the churches.

Mr. Schwarz believes that high school girls make an ideal church choir, but that boys of 16 or 17 are useless, having as yet no true concept of "bass" and being unable to sing treble.

Mr. Madeley Richardson was the next speaker and his talk was of such supreme excellence, and withal it proved to be so practically helpful that he was received with salvos of applause and the audience very gladly remained a half hour past the regular time of closing the morning session for the purpose of hearing the end of his remarkable paper.

A brief recapitulation of his "points," the subject being the "Church Choir," especially the boy choir, is here given. Boys are trained by him "absolutely the same as women," no boy applying for position in his choir is ever "tried" as to voice, if his address, manners and intelligence are good he is admitted and the voice is left to develop with the training. It is not the "material" in a choir which counts but the "method" of using it. This "method" is one of perseverance and has for its motto "Festina Lente." It includes the development of tremendous breathing capacity, prizes being given for exhibitions of the greatest feats in this line, position of body and head are very essential. All boys are made "critics" of their fellows, as well as competitors for prizes; at first and at last, always, Dr. Richardson teaches quality of tone, and he is so particular in this regard that he says it often takes even his trained choir one solid hour to learn one hymn to his satisfaction, for nothing is accepted except work, which is the perfection of tonal quality as well as having in it absolute certainty in every matter from rhythm to pronunciation of text.

"Sight Reading" is never taught by Dr. Richardson, his claim being that by the time everything else is perfectly learned this factor will have taken care of itself.

Assisting him in his lecture were his three charming daughters who exemplified his teaching methods by singing, exercises mostly, with such exquisite quality that the audience again and again redemanded certain selections. The tonal quality of these young ladies is something marvelous, though only one of them can be said to have a really big voice and the perfection of attack, shading, phrasing, and the absolute purity of intonation and of pronunciation are matters worth a long trip for any organist to hear (their work being supposed to be just what a choir boy should be trained to do), and also most trained vocalists might well study some of their best points. Altogether a thoroughly successful paper and one which should be repeated next year if Dr. Richardson and his charming daughters are again available.

Wednesday Afternoon

Mr. James W. Hill of the First Universalist Church of Haverhill, Mass., was the first speaker of the afternoon (Mr. Fry of Philadelphia, presiding), and had for his interesting subject "The Problems of the Organist in the Smaller Cities." His talk, beginning with an eulogy of Boston, wherein was expressed, practically, the thought that one should "see Boston and then die," drifted from that aristocratic subject shortly to Haverhill, Mass., a place of forty thousand inhabitants and which Mr. Hill took as his example of a "smaller place," though one ventures to express the opinion that the "problems" of an organist in a really small place are quite different from those encountered at Haverhill.

Mr. Hill, whose address was inaudible to most of the audience for the most part, complimented the New York Evening Post on its Saturday edition, containing music notes especially, and also took occasion to remark during his address that Chicago was one of the greatest music points of the country the chief reason for this, in his mind being the fact that many of the really great pianists of the past decade lived and taught in Chicago during their formative periods.

As to the "Problems," they seem not very severe ones to Mr. Hill and are overcome by a few simple rules. Be a good piano teacher "on the side," keep up your standard, give of your best without expectation of compliment, earn your pay, be in advance of your singers always, read all good literature liberally, do something (outside music) for your town, cultivate sociability, and last of all and very important, give lots of free organ recitals.

This last precipitated a very general discussion and a very liberal "chewing of the old bone" on the subject as was succinctly stated by the Rev. Mr. Kidder of Asbury Park, and this resulted in one of the liveliest and most interesting periods of the convention, among those offering fine remarks being Dr. Ward, president of the American Organ Recital Club, Mr. Fry, its vice president, Scott Brook, Mr. Van Cleve, Mr. Miller of Norfolk, Va., and Mr. Kidder.

Among other witty things Mr. Van Cleve said that the duties of a critic were to "know everything," or at least to "assume to know everything."

Following this Mr. William D. Armstrong of Alton, Ill., read a paper on "Hymns, Their Use and Abuse," which was largely historical in trend, but which offered much that was practical also.

Beginning with the statement that a Hymn was originally an "Ode to a hero," and quoting the exquisite verse of the "Gloria in Excelsus Deo" as an example of true reverence and dignity, he went on to point out the evolution of the Hymns from Psalms and showed the manner of elaboration and adaptation convincingly.

In the practical, latter-day field, he pointed out the abuses of putting sacred words to sectarian music, but gave it as his opinion that very much that was taboo to one person or sect might be used with great advantage by others, the over elaboration of the past is giving way to simplicity in the future, thinks Mr. Armstrong, and his address was concluded with much of reminiscence which had been gathered up by him in his visits to churches in many parts of the world, much of the music heard, as was to be expected, having been of incongruous nature and some in bad form, particularly displeasing to Mr. Armstrong, were the "Impromptu" Voluntaries and Offertories heard in many places, which, while they might be mistaken for their performers as genuine improvisation were yet, in actuality, nothing but rambling, formless and incoherent meanderings.

aphrase on the 94th Psalm, called by its composer, J. Reubke, a "Sonata."

These were played with great facility of technical display and very much of musical intelligence, while the smaller pieces between introduced a great deal of variety and color and were particularly rich in scintillant effects. The Krebs "Fugue," Franz Wagner "Fantasia" and Bach Chorale, "Wo soll ich fliehen hin," were broadly dramatic, the Clarence Lucas "Meditation" was clean legato, and the "Shadow Dance" from Dinorah, was played with a facility and a technical clarity which could scarcely be believed possible on the organ, such finesse of effect and cunningness of effects being used as might well have been the envy of any colorature soprano who heard them.

The Annual Banquet

Wednesday evening was a gala event in the convention and it will be remembered for a long time by all who were so fortunate as to be in the brilliant and happy company which assembled at the North End Hotel for the annual banquet of the N. A. O., and which, after a most sumptuous feast was further regaled by a list of speeches which were remarkable in variety and in the importance of those who spoke.

President Marks presided with great suavity and his own remarks were always felicitous and always absolutely apropos.

Many vital questions as to the future of the association were touched upon, much humor was displayed and altogether the banquet developed the fact of a very great amount of riches in brilliant rhetoric as pertaining to the members of the association.

Among the speakers were Dr. Ballard of Ocean Grove, Tali Esen Morgan, Mr. Walter N. Waters, Mr. Chester H. Beebe, Mr. Homer N. Bartlett, Mr. Frederick Schlieder, Mr. Arthur Scott Brook, Mr. Wilfred S. Boult, Rev. Scott Kidder, Mr. Elting, Mr. C. E. Knauss of Philadelphia, Mr. H. S. Logan, Mr. Williamson of Detroit, Mr. Fry of Philadelphia, Mr. Van Cleve, Mr. Miller of Norfolk, Mr. Turner of Massachusetts, Mrs. E. D. Bevitt of Oklahoma, Miss Opperman of Florida, Miss Nettie Crane of Baltimore, Mrs. Summers of Keokuk, Iowa, Miss Alice Deal, Chicago; Mr. Clifford Demorest of New York, and Mr. Wolf of Lancaster, Pa.

During the dinner music was furnished by an orchestra which might well have been spared as its music was noisy and vulgar but, interspersed with speechmaking, there were some genuinely interesting numbers.

The Ocean Grove Quartet sang Fannings "Millers Wooing" with unction and Mrs. Sutton, from the Auditorium, gave a truly artistic reading to "Un bel di" (Puccini), again proving herself the possessor of a fine voice and also showing in this selection that she has real artistry in abundance.

There were 250 guests at this brilliant function, a partial list reading as follows:

Thursday

The paper on "Musical Journalism," read by Charles E. Watt of Chicago, at the first session of Thursday was listened to by an unusual number of people and provoked considerable discussion.

This paper has already been printed in full in Music News and need not be recapitulated here. Among the questions asked Mr. Watt was the old one as to whether it was not better for a professional musician to advertise in a "secular" newspaper rather than a specifically musical paper, because of the fact (supposedly) that the former has much the larger circulation. His answer to this was that while the general newspaper undoubtedly had a larger circulation it was yet quite certain that only musically inclined people really read the music notes or advertisements in such a paper, whereas in a real music paper every reader was intensely interested in the subjects discussed and the advertisements.

These readers are by no means all professional musicians either and the case was cited of a test in which it was proven that a single copy of a certain music newspaper which was delivered each week at a certain music school in Chicago was found to be read each week by so many people in the office of that school that the old one was always actually in tatters before the new one appeared on the scene at the end of each week.

"Moto Proprio," by Mr. Walter N. Waters, organist of the Passionist Monastry, West Hoboken, brought, for the first time, Catholic music into the convention and proved to be of absorbing interest in-as-much as it was mostly quotation from the Appendix to "Moto Proprio" by Pope Pius X., the language of which was of exalted beauty.

Following this reading, Mr. Waters introduced as co-speakers Fathers Nicholas Ward, C. P., and Rev. Linus Monahan, C. P.

Father Nicholas was eloquent; at the same time he was decidedly witty. His special subject was "Organist and Choirmaster, from the Viewpoint of the Clergy." After expressing his "embarrassment" at appearing before so many ladies as were present, and causing a laugh by his statement that "two of a trade could never agree, especially if the trade were music," he touched upon the great beauty of the Gregorian Chant and other real church music, and explained its nonappreciation by many musicians in the fact that they do not understand it. Two modes or scales only are used by other writers, the major and minor (quite forgetting Debussy and other exotics, of course), but in the early Catholic music there are fourteen modes employed and no one is really capable of using or of understanding this music without very serious study. Its beauty, when properly studied and presented, is beyond telling. Father Linus said that inasmuch as a Divine service was different from any other function in life, that, as a matter of course, its music should be totally different also.

Both speakers utterly repudiated all secularism of all kinds, put an emphatic taboo on operatic music, and relegated the florid masses of Mozart, etc., to the oratorio stage.

In answer to direct questions all three of the speakers stated with great positiveness (in spite of the fact that much example to the contrary was cited by various organists present) that the edict of the pope in regard to Gregorian music is in absolute force and that its fracture anywhere was due only to the fact of the impossibility of strictly observing it in all sections, but these conditions would be universally removed just as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Arthur Scott Brook, who was scheduled to give an address at this point on "How Can the Scope of the N. A. O. Be Widened?" begged the indulgence of the convention in that he had found no time in which to prepare a formal paper, and instead thereof gave an impromptu but intensely interesting speech.

No one could wonder that Mr. Brook found "no time" to prepare a formal paper, for unquestionably he was an extremely busy young man throughout the session. He was everywhere all the time. He attended to a thousand details connected with the meetings and was so affable and smiling on all occasions that everyone learned to turn to him instinctively for every bit of information wanted. Music News is greatly indebted to him in this line. Besides this he again and again expressed views in the convention on such a variety of subjects and in such a fine way as to prove himself a sincere musician and one also thoroughly in accord with the most exalted ideals.

In his speech he touched upon an official paper for the N. A. O.; told how clubs should be maintained everywhere and how "get-together dinners" were invaluable adjuncts. State organization was also made a little clearer than before, and even such apparently foreign questions as "shall the moving picture organists be admitted to membership?" were discussed.

At this meeting Warren Gale of the Broadway Tabernacle, and J. Warren Andrews, also of New York, were guests.

At various other times during the convention many letters and telegrams were received, one of the latter being from Carl Rupprecht of Chicago. Resolutions of sympathy for T. Tertius Noble on the serious illness of his wife were passed, and the convention listened to a splendid eulogy of Mr. Hutchings, the famous organ builder, who has just died.

Thursday Afternoon

Dr. Homer N. Bartlett, a man who is a great favorite in the A. G. O. and who was greeted with enthusiasm whenever he appeared, was the first speaker of the afternoon and gave a profound and at the same time very interesting paper on "Orchestration for the Organist."

This included, first, some general remarks on real musicianship, and gave a concise statement of the previous training which leads up to the study and practice of "orchestration."

The instruments of the orchestra were treated both from the technical and the esthetic standpoints. National characteristics were dwelt upon at some length, and the opinion was expressed that from the Negro and not from the Indian would be taken the real germ of American music. The paper in its entirety was a scholarly exposition of its subjects and aroused much comment.

Mr. Chester H. Beebe followed with a thoroughly brilliant paper on "The Perfunctory Musician," which roused much crisp comment. This paper is printed in full in today's issue of the Music News.

"Three Defects, by Mr. James Pearce of Yonkers, N. Y., introduced a faithful adherent of the N. A. O. in a favorite subject, i. e., what should the organist be and do? Accompanying, extemporizing, and other aspects of the art were dwelt upon entertainingly. Mr. Pearce took occasion to laud the N. A. O. very highly, and said that while he had been in attendance at every meeting of the association to this date, his earnest hope was that he might be permitted to attend one hundred more meetings.

Mr. Demarest in Recital

Mr. Clifford Demarest of the Church of the Messiah in New York played an organ recital at 4:30, which was a model both in selection and in the skill with which the organ was managed. Mr. Demarest is a most refined organist and his use of the very expressive stops of the Austin organ was remarkably effective.

The Rheinberger "Sonata" opened the program with distinction; the "St. Ann's Fugue" (Bach), which followed, was played with remarkable steadiness of outline, and Guilmant's "Funeral March and Seraph's Song" was given a most distinguished reading.

Arthur Foote's "Pastorale" pleased the audience very much, and Homer Bartlett's "Festival Hymn" was so well liked that both performer and composer (who was present) had to respond to many recalls. It is a work of great nobility and strength and should find more frequent place on organ recital programs.

A suave "Nocturne" by H. Brooks Day was of elegant simplicity in the style in which it was presented, and Mr. Demarest's "A Pastoral Suite" (lately played in Chicago by Miss Tina Mae Haines) proved again to be a veritable mine of beauty. It has brilliancy and power in due proportion, with piquancy and daintiness, and proved to be one of the very popular numbers heard at the convention.

Storms at the Auditorium

In the evening Dr. Percy J. Starnes of Atlanta, Ga., played an unusually brilliant program on the great organ at the Auditorium, closing with Breitenbach's "Fantasia on Swiss Melodies," which includes also the "Tempest in the Alps," this being a storm of rugged proportions.

After the close of the Starnes program, Mr. Clarence Reynolds, by very special request, played the regular Ocean Grove "Storm," and thus were two outbursts of nature in quick succession depicted to a splendid audience which applauded the two impartially but very heartily.

Dr. Starnes opened his program with the "Allegro Vivace" from the Widor "Symphony No. 5," and at once established himself as a player with superb technical equipment, and one also who can paint most vivid tone pictures.

Saint-Saens' (Starnes) Barcarolle, "A Night in Lisbon," proved to be a languorous bit of sentiment, while the Liszt "Legend of St. Francis Preaching to the Birds" (transcribed for organ by Dr. Starnes) was as consummate a piece of clarity and deft imitation as one can hear in a season of concert-going. Mendelssohn's "Variations Serieuses" proved to be magnificent for the organ when so manipulated as they were by this player. The Starnes "Madrigal" was pleasing, and the Guilmant "Choral and Fugue" from the "Fifth Sonata" was a splendid example of organ virtuosity, especially along the line of transcendant pedalling.

As to the Reynolds "Storm," we here reproduce the program note which is read by thousands daily at Ocean Grove, as Mr. Reynolds plays it twice each day throughout the entire summer.

If anyone thinks that he cannot show forth all that is contained in this resume, this skeptic should come to Ocean Grove and hear for himself: in fact, he need not even go into the Auditorium, for the thunder effects, so marvelously worked out by Mr. Reynolds, can be heard all over the town.

THE STORM

(Copyright by Tali Esen Morgan)

A Story of the War

Part I.

It is night in camp. (Lights out.) The darkness and the peaceful stillness of the country are suggested by the organ playing very softly. Gradually, the dawn breaks ("Morning" music from the Peer Gynt suite by Grieg), and the birds begin their morning chorus. Sunrise, with bugle calls in the distant camp. Soon the soldiers are on the march to the stirring strains of the "Soldiers' Chorus" from "Faust," played by Regimental Band. Music and drums heard very faintly at first, but gradually the soldiers are drawing nearer. They pass through the city, and as the sound is lost in the distance the bells in a church tower jubilantly ring "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." The fife and drum corps is heard approaching playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The regiment passes and is lost to sight and sound.

Part II.

In the country—"God's Green Inn." Its beauty and its grandeur suggested by playing of the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah." The soldiers are making merry in camp with fiddles and bagpipes. Songs of the War—"Old Black Joe," "Old Folks at Home," etc., played on the bells. The clock strikes five. Evening service in the church on the hillside. "Abide with Me, Fast Falls the Eventide." Twilight is stealing on. In the distance is heard the sad strains of Chopin's "Funeral March" as "one of the boys" is taken to his last earthly resting place. For some time there has been heard the distant rumbling of thunder, and gradually the storm has been drawing nearer. It finally breaks in all its fury. The skies are black as night. Then the fearful thunder claps and vivid flashes of lightning! The wind howls and moans and the rain descends in torrents. After a while the storm is gone and peace reigns once more.

Part III.

It is the night before a great battle. A solemn stillness is over the camp. From the church comes the strains of the well known hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." It is 10 o'clock and on the clear night air the bugle blows "Taps" (lights out). The camp is once more asleep and the soldiers are dreaming of the loved ones at home. With the playing of that beautiful melody, "Home, Sweet Home," the "Storm" comes to a close.

Friday

The morning session opened with a paper on "The Oblong Nuisance," by Mr. Newton J. Corey of Detroit. Mr. Corey being very tall, has a distinct aversion to the "oblong" form in which many organ publishers bring out organ music, and many organists in the convention, who are not so tall, proved to have a very decided aversion to "upright" or the usual sheet music size for organ compositions. The discussion waxed very interesting and the publishers were called in to explain and defend or attack as the case might be. Much useful suggestion was made, among other things Mr. Beebe saying that if organists would memorize their music the shape of the sheet would not matter.

The whole subject proved to be a rather small one in actual discussion, but the ramifications to which it led were so many, and the opinions expressed were so positive, that much food for thought was furnished. Messrs. Schlieder, Kidder, Beebe, Armstrong, Huff, Van Cleve and others besides the representatives for the publishing houses joined in this merry discussion.

Mrs. E. B. Summers of Keokuk, Ia., came next, and very easily gave one of the most entertaining and practical papers of the entire week.

Mrs. Summers told, as it has never been told, the story of municipal music in Pittsburgh. She eulogized St. Paul as a city which had, at one time at least, stood for a wonderful musical development.

New Orleans, where she has also lived, proved to be a city most unresponsive to musical suggestion, but many smaller places had proven many of her theories to be practical and helpful. These theories include the forming of clubs, the giving of various series of concerts, and the fostering of municipal management of concert halls and recitals.

Besides telling what had been done and what could be done in faraway cities and towns, she spoke most tellingly of conditions at Ocean Grove, and in the convention itself, and her suggestions were such as to arouse much comment and invite much serious consideration.

She wants, next year, to see the "sisters" more generously represented on the program; they are already much in preponderance in the convention and she wants the duties of states presidents clearly defined, a matter which was actually taken up and thoroughly discussed at a later meeting.

A very telling simile used by Mrs. Summers was that of the master minds which have seen the possibility and harnessed the power of the Mississippi River at Keokuk in such wise that there is now being produced there electric power for many cities. Such, she said, are the musical possibilities all over the country if they can be harnessed and utilized.

Mr. Morgan's Impassioned Address

Tali Esen Morgan was scheduled for an address on "Standardization of the Organist," at the afternoon session, but, having sudden and unexpected demands upon his time, this was transferred to the morning session and the entire convention remained until long after the dinner hour listening to his impassioned and earnest plea for change of conditions in the convention.

He said that the association should be for the betterment of the conditions of the organist, and that therefore it should stand for better pay, better conditions, the abolition of the free recital, and other things which will go far toward giving the organist a little of that heaven he presents in song so often while he is still on this earth.

Mr. Morgan handled his subject without gloves and told the organists present that their attitude toward advertising themselves was antidiluvian; that they did not know their value and did not insist upon their rights.

He ventured the opinion that while any New York critic would easily be able to name hundreds of singers, that there was not one of these men who could name even as many as ten organists; this coming out of the fact that singers advertise, while organists do not.

He told of the difficulties of providing a paper for the association and of the general conduct of the promotive work which, of course, belongs to him as national superintendent.

A guarantee fund was asked for the continuance of the N. A. O. news, and such had been the persuasive eloquence of Mr. Morgan that a list of guarantors of such a fund was started, and before the convention closed on Saturday noon it had more than half realized the sum asked.

Mr. Morgan answered convincingly all criticism which had been made of him, and it was only necessary to have been at this meeting to become convinced that the work he has done has been colossal and that his interest has been stupendous.

Not only at this point, but throughout the week, Mr. Morgan was endorsed again and again, and even though he has not yet made the organists fully "common sense" as against the "impracticability" he so much deplores, he has at least taught the body to love him devotedly and to know that in him there is a friend whose worth and power cannot be overestimated.

After adjournment for dinner, this and many other business details were taken up, and such as were not finished by Friday were rounded out to completion on Saturday morning, both meetings being in Association Hall, Ocean Grove.

The reports of the secretary and treasurer were models of business clarity and they were amazingly fine from every standpoint. Both Mr. Waters and Mr. Beebe were given such recognition and endorsement as but rarely falls to the lot of any officer in such an organization.

It was shown by these reports that while 175 were in attendance last year and two organ recitals were given, this year the attendance closely approximated the 350 mark, and eight splendid recitals were heard by fine audiences. The present membership of the association was shown to be 1466.

Mr. Beebe came to an empty treasury last August, but today, after receiving during the year $409.95, and expending $309.63, there remains a balance in the bank (in the name of the A. N. A. O.), while every bill has been paid and there is now in the hands of the national manager considerable money still unrecorded.

The nominating committee reported that the convention owed a re-election to Messrs. Marks, Beebe and Waters, and that in giving this the association honored itself as well and certainly provided for another successful year. The election was made by acclamation, and to say that it was unanimous is to express the fact mildly. President Marks was given an ovation which lasted for many minutes and finally ended by the entire convention arising and giving him the "Chautauqua salute" with such enthusiasm that the moment resolved itself into an emotional outbreak such as is seldom witnessed.

The executive committee as elected is composed of the Messrs. Fred Schlieder, Mark Andrews, William A. Wolf, Arthur Scott Brook, William D. Armstrong, Arthur H. Turner, J. J. Miller, A. M. Richardson, Mr. Huff, Newton S. Corey, William H. Gage, E. F. Laubin, Rev. Scott Kidder and Mrs. B. S. Keator.

Homer Bartlett and Will MacFarlane were elected vice presidents, and Tali Esen Morgan was again chosen for national superintendent.

Ocean Grove was selected as the meeting place for next August, though the subject of another location was much discussed, and it was the consensus of opinion that a western city would be considered within a very few years. Looking to that end, the invitation to meet in San Francisco in 1915 was tentatively accepted, the acceptance to be ratified by the convention of next August.

New state presidents elected were: Miss Alice R. Deal for Illinois, Mr. Hill for Missouri, and Mr. Watson for Virginia.

Extremely interesting speeches were made on Friday and Saturday by Mr. Fred Schlieder, Mr. Scott Brook, Mr. Beebe, Mr. Waters, President Marks, Miss Crane, Rev. Scott Kidder and various state presidents, the content of all of these being felicitation on the fact of deliverance from a very "black year," and all of them bristling with hope for the future and pleasure in the fact that this year had been such a splendid augury in that direction.

Mr. Armstrong offered a set of resolutions which are very important and which are here given:

"The National Association of Organists is an organization which, as its name implies, is, first of all, national in its character.

"As such it avows no special allegiance to any particular section of the country; it endorses no particular publishing house nor firm of organ builders; it confines itself to no particular church, denomination nor group of churches or denominations; and its membership is open to every person in the United States who is of good moral character and plays or tries to play the organ.

"It is an association and not a union nor a guild. As such it cannot possibly conflict with the American guild of organists whose special function is the admission to membership on a basis of technical ability with the consequent raising of the standard of organ playing everywhere. In fact, the object of this association is to supplement, not to conflict with, that work which is, and ever shall be, the unique function of the guild.

"This is borne out by the fact that a large proportion of the loyal supporters of the new organization are loyal and prominent members of the guild. It is for organists.

"One of its special aims is the establishment of the profession on a more substantial basis, the development of esprit de corps among the members of that profession, and the dignified and reasonable demand that those men and women whose noble vocation is the sounding of the emperor of instruments shall, as a fraternity, be accorded their rightful place in the twentieth century scheme of things."

Resolution of thanks were offered the press, the Ocean Grove Association, the Arlington Hotel, the artists who assisted, the Asbury Park M. E. Church, the organ builders and publishers, in fact, many separate and important factors; and it was at this point that Mr. Arthur Scott Brook rereived his ovation, for it was plainly evident to everyone that he had done most of the work of the program committee and had been throughout the convention a tower of strength.

Mr. Kidder Presides

Rev. Scott Kidder, who throughout the convention was a splendid spokesman for everything that was practical and good, was asked to preside at the last two (business) meetings, and in doing this easily proved himself a master of parliamentary practice, even as he had already become well known for his terse and forceful rhetoric.

On Saturday morning Miss Crane made a speech in which she told emphatically how much Mr. Kidder had done for the association ever since its inception, and the enthusiasm with which her remarks were received carried eloquent proof that the organists present shared her exalted opinion of him fully.

Final Recitals

At 4:30 on Friday, Mr. N. S. Corey gave an "All American" organ recital in Asbury Park which was notable.

Scholarliness and good taste permeated everything he did and his program was of absorbing interest.

The opening numbers were a "Fantasie and Fugue" by S. Archer Gibson, and a "Sonata" by Ralph L. Baldwin, these establishing a serious and fine mood.

An "Oriental Sketch" by Kroeger, and an "Allegretto" by Foote were decidedly impressive, and the "Legend" and "Caprice" by Charles Wakefield Cadman were revelations as to the power of this young composer in organ scoring. Ad M. Foerster's "Prelude" proved a suave contrast, and a "Grand Sonata" by George E. Whiting was vivid and passionate—a "grand" sonata in reality.

At 8 o'clock in the same place the final recital introduced Mr. J. J. Miller of Norfolk, Va., in a splendidly considered and played list of works.

Mr. Miller is serious in attitude and sincere in his reading; he has ample technic and reads many subtleties into his interpretation.

The "Introduction and Variations" by Hesse, and "Sunshine and Shadow" by Buck were as novel as they were impressive, while "The Holy Offices" by Malling proved to be a piece of immense interest and distinctly religious import. Matthews' "Romanza" was fine, and Thorley's "Canzone" added a legato bit to the effect. Handel's old-fashioned "Cuckoo and Nightingale" sonata was played with clarity and effect, and the Faulkes "Scherzo Symphonique Concertant" proved brilliant virtuosity on the part of Mr. Miller.

His young pupil, and soprano soloist of his church, Walter Donavan, was brought forward in "With Verdure Clad," "Un bel di" and "Will o' the Wisp" (Spross) and in all of them displayed a voice of remarkable beauty, power and range with technical proficiency of remarkable degree. The work of this young singer brought an ovation and he was at once engaged for the children's festival at the Auditorium in Ocean Grove on August 15.

The Messiah

It has long since passed into a proverb all along the Jersey coast resorts that "The Messiah," as given by Tali Esen Morgan at Ocean Grove is a superb piece of work, and, as this pleasure had been withheld for a season or two, it was all the more eagerly received this year and not only the 350 organists in attendance at the convention, but also 9,650 more people crowded into the great auditorium and made the event a distinctly gala one.

The New York Festival Chorus (of which Mr. Morgan is conductor), makes a special occasion of this and comes from New York en masse to assist in the performance each summer that Mr. Morgan chooses to put it on, and these, in conjunction with the Ocean Grove Chorus, constitute a total of 700 singers which, on Saturday night made a most satisfactory effect.

Mr. Morgan indeed is a choral conductor with few equals, and also he can manage an orchestra better than almost any choral conductor who might be named, and on Saturday extracted excellent results from the Symphony Orchestra of New York, which supplied the accompaniments although that body of players did not seem particularly anxious to do the very best kind of work—being, like many other organizations which might be named, entirely apathetic as to the beauties of "The Messiah."

The volume and the quality of the tone evolved by the chorus was something amazing. A chorus of one thousand voices has often seemed less effective to this writer, one reason for this probably being that the Auditorium at Ocean Grove is absolutely perfect as to acoustics.

"And the Glory of the Lord" was thrilling—the soprano section especially being of such brilliancy and such steadiness of tone as to be notable. "For unto us a child is born" was a triumph for each division of the chorus and for Mr. Morgan, while the "Hallelujah" has seldom been heard when it was so inspirational.

Mr. Morgan included in his list the very seldom used chorus numbers, "The Lord gave the word" and "Their sound is gone out," both of these sounding so fresh and being so altogether effective that it is cause for wonder that other conductors do not occasionally use one or both of them to replace some of the numbers which have been used so incessently.

It is not only brilliance and body of tone which is so completely at Mr. Morgan's command either—for there was absolute reverence and much refinement of quality in the "Surely He hath borne our grief," which to this writer was the most effective moment of the evening.

The soloists were well chosen and each one made great success with the audience.

Miss Marie Kaiser has a coloratura soprano voice which is very beautiful, and which she used with much effect. "Rejoice greatly" proved to be the best suited to her voice of any of the arias, but all falling to her lot were well conserved.

Miss Mary Jordan has a beautiful stage presence and a splendid contralto voice. She is suave and temperamental and her scale is an even one throughout. She sang "He shall feed His flock" best of her numbers thereby proving herself an absolutely talented artist for oratorio uses.

Mr. Dan Beddoe is a tenor of such distinction and Mr. Frederick Martin so excells in the rendition of the bass score of "The Messiah" that it is only necessary to say at this time that both of them were in excellent shape and both were most cordially received. Mr. Martin's pronunciation of sacred text is a revelation.

Clarence Reynolds at the organ was a tower of strength—in fact, it may be said without any disparagement to the orchestra that the really broad and effective moments of background were supplied by this talented young player.

Our Pictures

Besides the picture of Miss Kaiser, who sang in "The Messiah" and of Tali Esen Morgan, whose face is probably the most familiar one in Ocean Grove, we show with this article a likeness of the Rev. A. E. Ballard, president of the Ocean Grove Association. Mr. Ballard is ninety-four years old and yet he is almost as active as Mr. Morgan himself and is a marvel of accuracy and good judgment on all business matters pertaining to Ocean Grove affairs.

It happened that the week of the convention was some degrees warmer than is usual at Ocean Grove and "The Messiah" night was particularly so, it will therefore form a pleasant contrast for those organists who were present to see today a picture of the Auditorium in winter time, and there is also a view of Mr. Morgan's Ocean Grove residence.

Addenda

Ocean Grove is, as everyone knows, a camp meeting primarily, though also a summer home of music, and the park surrounding the Auditorium is dotted with places of worship. There is a memorial tabernacle, a chapel and a junior chapel besides an all-year M. E. Church.

All during convention week Mr. Morgan held "Messiah" rehearsals in the evenings at Association Hall, over the postoffice. On one evening this writer was walking behind two women—strangers in Ocean Grove, when one of them, hearing the strains of "Hallelujah" coming from the hall, said to her companion, "My Lord! there's another church."

Sunday in Elizabeth

The exigencies of "B. and O. travel" necessitated a four-hour stay on Sunday at Elizabeth, N. J., a large manufacturing city now, but also a place of revolutionary fame and containing much that is of historical interest.

Morning service was attended at St. John's Episcopal Church, which is a handsome old structure standing in the principal business street of the city in the exact spot where the first St. John stood in 1703.

The church is surrounded by an old burying ground and just across the street stands the First Presbyterian Church, a vine-covered structure also very old and surrounded also by ancient graves, this venerable pile being flanked by the very modern and very beautiful Carnegie library.

The service at the Episcopal church was well conducted, but the music was so noncommital in character as to be worthy of little comment. The hymns, however, were well done, both by organist and congregation.

Exhibit of Consoles

(Detailed by Mrs. E. B. Summers)

Entering the room in which was the exhibit of consoles—first, on the left stood the handsome exhibit of the Austin Organ Company of Hartford, Conn., a three-manual organ designed for the First Church of Christ (Scientist), Baltimore, Md. Also an exhibit of the stop-keys and name-board for the Chapel of the Intercession, Trinity parish, New York, which has sixty-eight speaking stops.

Both of these organs have the general adjustable combination affecting the entire organ.

A new type of touch is one of the principal characteristics of the Austin organ, with top key resistance of four and one-half ounces to start key down, and takes but two and one-half ounces to hold the key down.

The keyboard has a gentle slope, greatly facilitating the reach.

An arrangement by which the lightest touch throws off all stops is provided in a cancellation strip placed over each division, the full length of swell, great, solo, pedal and other sections. The swell pedals are electric, and the others present a new type in which a mere touch is sufficient for the tone.

Every known modern means has been used to perfect this exquisite instrument.

Passing on around the room, the next exhibit was a four-manual Hutchings organ, made by the Hutchings Organ Company of Boston. This console is made of the most beautiful eucalyptus or gumwood and is exquisitely carved. It was designed for St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, Troy, N. Y., and when placed will be one of the largest organs in the country. It has fifty-four speaking stops and a processional stop in choir room, to enable the choir to get perfect pitch. The combinations at the key-desk are easily prepared.

It is said that in building this organ, for the first time in organ-building history, the builders have been able to get the valve not more than three inches from the toe of each and every pipe throughout the organ, which enables the voices to correctly voice, tone and regulate every stop.

This organ was built exactly according to the recommendation of the American Guild of Organists in their standardization of the console.

Rubber pedals are used, and the crescendo pedal is raised. The pedal keyboard is also according to the specifications of the guild.

A new system of triple contact has been used, made of thin pieces of eucalyptus wood with the fine grain of each piece running in different directions, so that warping is impossible. The contact is made complete at three different points, making failure of contact impossible.

The next console was built by the M. P. Moller Company of Hagerstown, Md. The exhibit consists of a console for the Church of Strangers, New York City, of which Mr. Arthur Scott Brook is organist. Several of Mr. Brook's own ideas are used in this organ, such as the "momentary tremolo" and the "reversible tablet couplers," located between the manuals.

Piston combinations are adjustable at the key-desk and move the registers, which consist of large solid ivory draw-knobs in vertical stop-jambs, after the plan of Lemani.

The pistons are duplicated by pedal studs included in this exhibit, and the wind chest, illustrating electric action, on which were mounted flue-pipes, exhibited by Edwin B. Hedger, and reed-pipes, exhibited by Mr. F. J. White.

In addition to the consoles, there were exhibited the Spencer Steel Orgoblo, an electric organ blower, and the Polyphone Pipe.

The Spencer Company manufactures a full line of their product, ranging in size from one-sixth of a horse-power up to sixty horse-power.

The exhibit shown is to be installed in Wayne Avenue Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

There are fourteen orgoblos in Wannamaker's stores in New York and Philadelphia.

In the organ in Philadelphia, which is the organ used in Music Palace at the World's Fair, St. Louis, there are three orgoblos of sixty-two horse-power.

The number of stops in this organ are soon to be increased by forty-two new stops, making in all 184 speaking stops. An orgoblo of thirty horse-power is also used on the Austin organ in City Hall, Portland, Me.

The Polyphone Pipe is the invention of Mr. Robert Y. Barrows of Rutherford, N. J., the model used in the exhibit having been built by the Hook-Hastings Company of Boston.

It is designed to save space and expense in the pipework of the organ, particularly in the pedal part, by making each pipe do the work of two, thereby affording both a soft and loud stop with but one set of pipes. There are two inlets to the same pipe, the larger one blowing the pipe to its full strength and the small one furnishing the softer power. The wind chest and stop action are constructed exactly as though two sets of pipes were used, except that the chest may be made narrower.

In this polyphone system the same wind pressure is used for both powers; the air

An electric organ blower was also on exhibition, which furnished the power for the demonstration of the polyphone pipe.

This is the first time that such a splendid exhibit of consoles and the separate mechanical devices of the pipe organ have been shown at a convention, and it was one of the most interesting features of the entire session, the console room being almost at all times crowded with visitors.

Sheet Music Exhibit

In the rooms of the executive department exhibits of sheet music and books, principally for the organ, were shown by the Maxwell Music Company and the Schirmer Company of New York, the Oliver Ditson Company of Boston and the John Church Company of Cincinnati. It is probable that no finer collection of organ music and books has ever been shown, many fine works in artistic bindings being shown.

Ballmann.—Martin Ballmann and his Symphony Band are presenting fine programs at the Fifth Annual Cotton Carnival and Exposition at Galveston, Texas.

NOTES FROM MR. STULTS' STUDIO

Mr. James Hamilton whose unusual endowments as a tenor have excited admiration wherever displayed, and who owes his entire development to Mr. Stults, is at present touring the larger Eastern Chautauquas as tenor with the National Opera Quartet. He is meeting with splendid success and has received most flattering notices. He will return in the fall to resume his studies under Mr. Stults' direction.

Miss Edith Maldwyn Jones, Welsh Mezzo-Contralto, another of Mr. Stults' talented pupils, is at present visiting her parents in North Wales, it being her first visit home in five years. She has been engaged as soloist at one of the larger Welsh Eisteddfods. After filling this and several other engagements, she will return to this country to continue her study.

Bachman.—Miss Ella Bachman of the Auditorium is making a trip through the south in which she is combining professional work with sight-seeing. She has appeared in a number of cities in lecture-song recital and has four dates still to fill, the comment of the newspapers has been very favorable, especially from the cities of Mobile and New Orleans.

JOHN R. RANKL

The following program will be given by Miss Mary Hoover, lyric-dramatic soprano, a pupil of John R. Rankl, assistant to Thomas N. MacBurney at the MacBurney Studios, Tuesday evening, August 19, Miss Grace Grove, accompanist:

Vissi d'Arte (La Tosca) ..... Puccini
Ave Maria ..... Gounod
Where Blossoms Grow ..... Sans Souci
When the Fairies Are Asleep ..... Raymond
Lass With the Delicate Air ..... Arne
I Hear You Calling Me ..... Marshall
Come to the Garden, Love ..... Salter

MRS. M. SCHUTZ-BURKHARDT

The following comment on the church singing of Mrs. Burkhardt was made by the Messenger and the Tribune of Meadville, Pa.

Mrs. M. S. Burkhardt sang "Behold the Master Passeth By," as an offertory solo. After the sermon she sang "Bow Down Thine Ear, O Lord," by Mr. Fayden, and her rich soprano voice never sounded sweeter.—Messenger.

Mrs. Burkhardt as soloist, rendered "Behold the Master Passeth By" for the offertory selection and "Bow Down Thy Ear, O Lord," at the close of the address. Mrs. Burkhardt has a splendid soprano voice of rich and sweet quality and her two pieces were much enjoyed.—Tribune.

FLORA M. GALLOWAY

Miss Flora M. Galloway, the leading teacher of piano at Altoona, Pa., and who so successfully managed a Liebling recital in that city last season, has been spending this summer in Chicago. Miss Galloway is a poet, along with her other attainments, and Music News is glad to print the following example of her verse:

BY THE TROUT STREAM

I sat and mused beside the brook
And whiled the happy hours away,
Reading from Nature's wonder book
Her secrets both sublime and gay.

The feathered songsters, harbingers
Of joyous spring and tender flowers,
Seemed calling me from cares away
To rest in quiet woodland bowers.

The music of the crystal stream
The bliss of solitude sublime,
Called mine and heart from earthly dream
To higher thoughts and things divine.

And then my spirit winged its flight
To heavenly spheres and visions grand,
To praise and bless and love the One
Who holdeth all things in His hand.

Nichols.—Mr. and Mrs. John W. Nichols have just been engaged for the Croxton Quartet for next season, Mr. Nichols as tenor, and Mrs. Nichols as pianist of the organization. They are spending a few weeks at North Long Branch, and occasionally taking part in the concerts in the large Auditorium of the Ocean Grove assembly. So many persons who have heard Mr. Nichols this summer have requested him to give lessons in voice culture during the vacation that he has now opened a studio in the Appley building at Asbury Park, N. J., where he already has a number of talented pupils from various parts of the country.

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERT

An audience of good size and unabated enthusiasm attended the summer night concert at Warren Avenue Church on the 7th inst. The program was given by Madame Edla Lund, soprano; John R. Rankl, basso cantante, and Maurice Goldblatt, violin. The accompanists were Rose Goldblatt, who was extremely sympathetic and responsive to Mr. Goldblatt's violin numbers; Mr. Ralph Gerber, officiated in like capacity for the vocalists and gave the good account of himself we have grown to expect when he is at the piano.

MAURICE GOLDBLATT

JOHN RANKL

Madame Lund has a true nobility of style. This gives a distinction and interest to all that she undertakes which cannot be ignored by an ordinary listener and which adds immeasurably to the natural vocal gifts. In her group of Scandinavian songs the effects had been so studied that they were second nature and came out with delightful sincerity and spontaneity. The Peterson-Berger "Echo Song" was a capital study of vocal values, the Grieg "Swan" was full of fine tenderness and poesy, and the legend-like song of Heise which might be translated to mean "Wild, wild was the wind," was dramatically varied in its presentation. In Mrs. Salter's noble song, "Serenity," there was breadth of an imposing sort, and Lang's "Mavourneen" was done for all it was worth, as was also Mrs. Beach's "Year's at the Spring."

Mr. Rankl grows and grows and improves right along. His numbers were excellently chosen for variety and contrast. He brought to his task the well-felt charm of his excellently placed voice and then gave to them many nuances of taste and expression. Not least of the nicely done things was Jensen's too little used "Old Heidelberg." Mr. Rankl sang it as if he had been a student there and loved the very walls. His English group was delightful also and included Pureell's "Dog Star," Gould's "Curfew," a fine bit of melody, and Moss' "Floral Danee," to which he added a light encore.

EDLA LUND

There was no doubt as to the enjoyment by the audience of Mr. Goldblatt's violin contributions to the evening. He was at his very best in the Sarasate "Zigeunerweisen." He seemed to have caught the very strain of that strange wisdom of strange peoples and delivered the light or serious philosophy winningly. His own compositions have a real gift of tuneful melody and are worked out neatly and with

Mr. Stults has had the busiest summer of his teaching experience, having given an average of 50 lessons per week during the summer term. As one of the results of this same term he has listed three new voices for the coming year, all of which are of unusual promise. Mr. Stults will spend the next six weeks in Northern Wisconsin, where he will devote himself to his favorite pastime of fishing.

Mrs. Monica Graham Stults has been engaged as soprano for the coming festival held under the auspices of the MacDowell Memorial Association at Peterboro. N. H., during the latter part of August. She will sing the soprano roles in Coleridge-Taylor's Cantata, "A Tale of Old Japan," as well as the leading part in a new cantata for women's voices with soprano and baritone solos, which A. EDWARD WALKER

With many pleasant rounds of golf on some of the beautiful golf links around Chicago and some very diligent study in preparing new and working over his old repertoire of arias, songs and oratorio, in preparation for a very active year under Harry Culbertson's management, Mr. Walker is spending a very pleasant and profitable summer in and around Chicago.

EDWARD WALKER

Last week, Friday, Mr. Walker filled a most important engagement with Harry Culbertson's Operatic Quartet at the Van Wert, Ohio, Chautauqua. Being well known and his singing much admired, his friends came from several adjoining towns to hear him on this occasion.

GERTRUDE V. O'HANLON NOTES

Gertrude V. O'Hanlon, the Chicago manager, has booked a splendid artists' course at Muscatine, Iowa. The course will include the Metropolitan Grand Opera Quartet; Albert Borroff, basso, in recital, and the Alice Nielsen Co. The latter by permission of Charles L. Wagner.

Miss O'Hanlon announces the engagement on December 7 of Mr. Albert Lindquest, the young Swedish tenor, to appear at a Sunday concert with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. This splendid young artist will fill many important engagements the coming season, many requests coming in to his manager for oratorio dates.

Parelli.—A number on the orchestra program at Ravinia last week which received a near-ovation, was the "Lullaby" from "Ombrian Rhapsody" (Parelli). An entire program of that composer's works will be featured by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Karl Buren Stein have just returned from a lecture and recital trip, visiting Clarindo, Sioux City, Waterloo and Manchester. Mr. and Mrs. Stein are very popular in Iowa and return engagements have become an annual affair.

MRS. ELSE HARTHAN-ARENDT

Mrs. Else Harthan-Arendt substituted for Mrs. Corlew-Smidt at the New First Congregational Church on last Sunday. She sang Godfrey's elaborate "Nearer to Thee," and gave it with splendid feeling and in fine style. She is an artist of whom much may rightfully be expected.

ELSE HARTHAN-ARENDT

Cramp.—Carrie M. Cramp, who has been organist of St. Peter's M. E. Church at Reading for some time, has been made a Fellow of the A. G. O.—she being the first woman in Pennsylvania to be so honored. Miss Cramp has just accepted a position as director of public school music at Hanover, Pa., and also organist at St. Marks' Church.

Marks.—The cantata, "Victory Divine," by J. Christopher Marks was given at the Asbury Park M. E. Church last Sunday evening under the direction of Mrs. Bruce S. Keator. The soloists were Mrs. W. T. Hubbard, Mrs. Ella Markell, John Barnes Wells and Grant Odell.

Cowan.—Mrs. Orpha Kendall Holtsmann, soprano, and Mr. Phelps Cowan, pianist, appeared in joint recital last week at the Lake Forest home of Mrs. George McKinlock.

REDPATH OPERA COMPANY

Music News is very glad to correct a misstatement made two weeks ago in connection with the Opera Company which appeared so successfully at the Gary Chautauqua.

Inadvertently we named this the "Dunbar Opera Company," a mistake which the genial tenor would not want to stand inas-much as the production being made was drilled jointly by Mr. Hugh Anderson, the basso, and Mr. David Dunbar, the tenor.

The company is called the "Redpath Opera Company," and is fortunate in having an ensemble which includes besides these two artists, Miss Esther Muenstermann, contralto, and Miss Mabel Sherwood Cox, soprano.

All concerts to be assisted by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Edgar Nelson, organist.

CHICAGO GRAND OPERA CO.

Many inquiries are rife concerning the production of Wagnerian opera during the coming season by the Chicago Grand Opera Company. Wagner's last and greatest work, "Parsifal," will be given in Chicago with an exceptionally strong cast, correct and imp-sing mise en scene, on three Sundays in January.

On the 13th of last May, the thirtieth anniversary of Wagner's death was observed, and it had unusual significance in that it released the rights of his last work, "Parsifal," to the entire world. Already two managers in Paris have announced elaborate representations of the Bayreuth masterpiece, and it will be presented in all the cities of Germany. The Chicago Grand Opera Company has already secured the authentic score and prompt book from B. Schott & Son, Mayence.

The Chicago cast for "Parsifal" will be as follows: Charles Dalmores as "Parsifal," Julia Claussen or Minnie Saltzman Stevens as "Kundry," Clarence Whitehill as "Amfortas," Henri Scott as "Gurnemanz," and Armand Crabbe as "Klingsor."

Amadeo Bassi, the distinguished lyrical tenor, who is reckoned a force in dramatic delineation, was a very popular member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company during the first two seasons of its existence, dropped out last year to fill important engagements abroad. One of his notable appearances was in the creative role in "The Girl of the Golden West." He made a pronounced hit at the Grand Opera in Paris in operas of the standard repertoire, and further appeared in a number of Italian cities, and made a tournie into Russia. It will undoubtedly be a matter of satisfaction for many opera-goers to know that Amadeo Bassi has been engaged for the coming season with the Chicago Grand Opera Company and will appear in the roles with which he has been favorably identified, notably in a revival of the "Jewels of the Madonna," and, it is understood, in new creations. It is a matter of great interest that Sig. Bassi will sing in several English lish operas.

Pietro Mascagni declares that his new opera, "Parisina," will not permit of a portly prima donna lead—not a hectic heroine—but calls for a young woman, slim, delicate and fascinating. Up to the present writing it looks as though the Chicago Grand Opera Company was about the only one that had this sort of cantatrice. Artistic youth has a fine opportune share in its performances. It is remarked that Mascagni's method of composing "Parisina" was to submit his improvised melodies to his collaborator, the famous fictionist, Gabriel D'Annunzio, who would usually remark, "Ah, very well, very well indeed. Do not change a single note!' Mascagni remarked naively to a friend in relating the circumstance, "D'Annunzio does not know a note of music, but he feels it in a singularly sensitive manner.

in time to cover this concert, after having come from the organists' convention at Ocean Grove, where he heard splendid programs by organists from Springfield, Mass., Pittsburgh, Montclair, N. J., New York City, Atlanta, Ga., Detroit, Mich., and Norfolk, Va.; and that Mr. Christian stood up absolutely to the test thus imposed speaks not a little for his musicianship, for, as a matter of fact, no more pleasing playing had been heard during the week in the east, nor had a more delightful program been presented.

Mr. Christian plays with distinguished intelligence from the interpretative standpoint, and his technical equipment is all that his program required, with much to spare.

His choice of registration was most apt and his general taste in the matters of tempo and movement was always effective.

Opening with a Rheinberger "Sonata" movement, a "Reverie" (Bonnet), and a "Scherzo-Caprice" by Bernard, which were not heard by this writer, he at once established a fine sympathy between himself and the audience, which grew in intensity as the evening progressed.

PALMER CHRISTIAN

The "Prelude and Fugue" in E minor, one of the most quiet of Bach numbers, was played excellently (with a little bit too much pianissimo in registration); the "Sceur Monique" of Couperin developed much of piquancy as well as excellent sustained work, while the Martini "Gavotte" was so well done and so charming in its effect that a recall followed. To this Mr. Christian responded with a beautiful melody, musically phrased and sympathetically colored.

The last group opened brilliantly with the "Norwegian War Rhapsody" by Sinding, followed by a "Sarabande" of Karg-Elert and a little known "Esquisse" by Schumann, and reached its climax in the "Intermezzo" of Hollins, which is a splendid piece of organ writing and which was played at this time exceptionally well. The list ended effectively with an "Allegro con Fuoco" by de Boeck. Alternating with Mr. Christian, and also very artistic and very successful, was Miss Barbara Wait, contralto, who, always dependable, at this concert rather outshone herself.

Her voice is one of great beauty and of a power also which is remarkable. Her musicianship is great and her enunciation of text is such as to give her fine control over interpretative factors.

Wolf's "Verborgenheit," Brahms' "Sapphic Ode" and Bemberg's "Chant Venetian" made an opening group which was distinguished by variety and which was delivered with conviction.

"Only a Rose," by Downing, again proved its inherent charm and also the fact that Miss Wait can sing it to perfection. "The Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold" (Whelpley) showed facility and range, while Neidlinger's "On the Shore" was as suave a piece of work as one might wish to hear. Its accompaniment is not so beautiful as that of another "Boat Song" we hear very frequently, but its voice line is infinitely sweeter.

For encores Miss Wait sang Arne's "Lass with the Delicate Air" and one of the numerous settings of "Thou Art Like a Flower." Mr. Cowan again proved himself to be one of the best accompanists in the field.

THE WOLFSOHN BUREAU

With the return of Mr. A. F. Adams from Europe, the manager of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, the pioneer of musical agencies in this country, plans for one of the most extensive concert campaigns that this country has ever known have been perfected. With a list of nearly fifty of the leading concert stars under their exclusive management, they have arranged for a series of from four to ten concerts to be given in each of the following cities: Albany, Syracuse, Montreal, Detroit, Toledo, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Kansas City, Wichita, Oklahoma City, Dallas, Fort Worth, San Antonio, Houston, New Orleans, Washington, D. C., Denver, Portland, and four other cities in the northwest, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The artists to be presented in these courses include Mme. Schumann-Heink, Louise Homer, Alma Gluck, Josef Hofman, Teresa Carreno, and Mischa Elman. In addition to these special concert courses a large number of single engagements have also been arranged for these and other artists on the list. Madame Schumann-Heink, who has just finished a series of Chautauqua engagements will rest until October 1, when she will begin her winter season in Bangor and Portland, Me., singing at the state music festival. She is also engaged as the principal feature of the Worcester, Mass., music festival on October 2 and 3. Her tour will extend around the whole country, and she will make but one appearance in New York City, and that in a song recital in Carnegie Hall on January 27.

She is to sing five operatic engagements with the Chicago Grand Opera company, Sig. Campanini making a special production of "Der Prophet" so that Madame Schumann-Heink might be heard in the role of "Fides" which is one of her greatest parts. Tita Ruffo, that extraordinary Italian Baritone, will make a special concert tour under the management of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, during the months of January and February. While he will be in the country the entire season with the exception of these two months Mr. Ruffo will devote the balance of his stay here to operatic performances. Alma Gluck will also return in December next for five months' tour. Her successes in London this past spring were so emphatic that she has been offered a large number of engagements throughout the English province, but has declined to change her plans and will spend the fall with Madame Sembrich at her villa in Nice, preparing new programs for her forthcoming tour. Her first New York appearance will be in a song recital at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday afternoon, January 6.

Madame Louise Homer is to make a six weeks' concert tour prior to the opening of the opera season. This tour will take her as far west as Sioux Falls, S. D. Her tour opens on October 5 and ends on November 12.

Other artists under the management of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau include Florence Hinkle, soprano, who will open her season at the Worcester Music Festival in October, and is scheduled for two appearances in New York in recital Tuesday evening, October 28 and in December with the Oratorio Society. Mr. Evan Williams, the great Welsh tenor, who will make his re-appearance in New York in recital in Aeolian Hall on Friday evening, November 7, and later will be heard with the Oratorio Society in its Christmastide performances of "The Messiah." Mr. and Mrs. Reed Miller, tenor and contralto, who will be heard in their first recital in Aeolian Hall on the evening of December 3. Mr. Miller will also be heard with the Oratorio Society in March, and Margaret Keyes, the very successful contralto. While abroad Mr. Adams closed several contracts for new attractions to visit this country during the season of 1914-1915.

CHRISTINE MILLER

Recital, Chattanooga, Tenn., November 21, 1912. "In presenting Christine Miller, a contralto of superlative charm, the Chattanooga Choral Society arranged for this city one of the rarest of musical treats. Not for some time has a vocal artist of the caliber of Miss Miller been in Chattanooga. Her voice, a deep, strong contralto, was not the singer's only asset. Her gracious bearing, personal attractiveness and an unusual kind and very happy way of entering whole-souledly into the spirit of her various renditions drew from the audience an enthusiastic applause and appreciation that are exceptional here."—Daily Times.

"With an enthusiasm that was instantly contagious Miss Christine Miller, contralto, sang through a delightful repertoire before an appreciative audience in the hall of the Chamber of Commerce. Brought to this city by the Chattanooga Choral Society this "bonnie Scotch lassie" from Glasgow, demonstrated the truth that the height of artistic achievement lies in simplicity and sincerity. Her voice is a pure contralto of fine range, keeping well its uniformity throughout. As is natural with such a voice, its sympathy and appeal are more apparent in the lower notes. Her enunciation is perfect, and not a word was lost upon her hearers, who from first to last attested their satisfaction in prolonged applause, eliciting many encores."—The News.

ELEANOR EVEREST FREER

A miniature (advertising) edition of "My Garden" by Freer, has been issued by William A. Kaun Music Company of Milwaukee, and proves most interesting. This charming little song is No. 8 of Op. 10, "Six Songs to Nature," all of which are splendid as to musical development and very delightful in form and style.

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

By Sidney Silber

Don't be a "dry" pianist, no matter what your moral or political convictions are. In the sight of so many "bars," it is incumbent to play with a "liquid" tone.

Until equal suffrage is granted in all the states, women may find solace and abundant excellent opportunity for "self-expression," self-development and self-assertion in piano playing. No law prohibits it.

When you think you have mastered a composition, "try it" on some disinterested person—preferably one who is ignorant of technical values. If you please such a person, you may be satisfied that you have made music.

To be a first-class pianist, you must be able to attract, fascinate and charm your listeners. To be a great pianist, you must compel. All of this must be done legitimately, i. e., you must preserve the spirit of the music, and express personality and individuality.

The pedals often cover a multitude of keyboard sins. On the other hand, they frequently mar excellent keyboard work.

"Traditional interpretations" have been grossly overestimated.

A paraphrase on two lines of "The Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner," which applies to many students:

"Notes, notes everywhere,
And not a bit of music."

It is safe—even advisable—to emulate the example of great artists. They are the "doers" in art.

A public demonstration by an artist, if intelligently listened to, is worth months of instruction by the best of teachers.

There is no "one and only correct" way of playing any passage, much less a composition. The main thing always, is to convince and to make others feel. That is the first and last requirement of interpretative art.

Music was brought into the world to uplift and beautify our humdrum existences. Any one who produces only a repetition of this humdrum spirit should be publicly proclaimed a nuisance.

Treat your piano like a pet. Many persons have no respect for this sensitive, responsive and nobly musical instrument.

NORFOLK FESTIVAL

The Norfolk (Conn.) Festival held on Wednesday evening, July 23, was more noteworthy than its predecessors. Long before the day of the concert the 700 seats in the Congregational Church were sold, and several hundred eager music devotees grouped themselves around the edifice in order to listen from the outside.

Mme. Schumann-Heink and H. Evan Williams were among the artists. The program was an artistic and ambitious one and was listened to with great attention by the huge audience. The honors of the occasion were carried off by Mme. Schumann-Heink and Evan Williams.

ELSE HARTHAN—ARENDT

Following are some of the European press notices of Mme. Else Harthan-Arendt, soprano, who has lately come to Chicago to enter the professional field:

Stuttgart—Neues Tageblatt of January 10, 1907: "Everything in this concert was charming, especially the bewitching songs of Else Harthan, followed by rousing applause."

Stuttgart—Neues Tageblatt, March 6, 1907: "Else Harthan, who has already charmed the audience with her 'Rose,' expressing with feeling the poetical sweetness which characterizes this part. The collection of songs she sang before were also rendered in a perfect, artistic manner."

Heilbronn — Neckar-Zeitung, November 2, 1905: 'Miss E. Harthan, daughter of the well-known composer, Hans Harthan, from whom she sang also a collection of very delightful numbers, is in possession of a marvelous gold-clear voice, while her reciting is excellent and her appearance is graceful."

Canstatt — Canstatter Zeitung, May 2, 1906: "Else Harthan, a fine and well-trained soprano, obtained a rousing and well deserved ovation. She sang the beautiful aria from 'Freischuetz' with elegance and elevation, three songs by Brahms and three others by Hans Harthan in such perfect manner, that the applause would not cease till she sang several encores.'"

Munich—Neueste Nachrichten, December 3, 1906: "Else Harthan appeared before a distinguished audience and proved to be an excellent qualified singer. With songs by Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms, Reger, Wolff, Liszt, Rubinstein, and Harthan she had plenty of opportunities to show her many sided talent, and it must be said that she did justice to every one of the composers and delighted the crowded assembly."

OPERA ANNOUNCEMENTS

In time past, it has been the prevailing custom with operatic impresarios to announce their prospectus, possibly as early as thirty days previous to the first performance of their season, and then by reason of the idiosyncracies of artists, to issue daily bulletins, announcing changes, both as to opera and cast. Cleofonte Campanini appears to be made of livelier stuff. Ever since the curtain fell on the last opera of the last season, he has been busily engaged, rounding up the forces of the scattered stars that he has engaged for the season of the Chicago Grand Opera Company. This tireless and well directed enterprise has secured results that are as firmly fixed as an opera contract will allow and he has been able to send to Manager Bernhard Ulrich of the Auditorium in Chicago, not only the list of leading people, but the repertoire for the entire season, four months in advance of the opening. Some important negotiations are still pending, but the secured stars are of a magnitude to at once arrest attention and win the commendation of the music-loving public.

He announces the engagement of the following well-known artists: Sopranos, Mary Garden, Carolina White, Lina Cavalieri, Frieda Hempel, Florence Macbeth, Jane Osborn-Hannah, Minnie Saltzman-Stevens, Maggie Teyte, Marta Dorda, Frances Alda, Jenny Dufau, Alice Zeppilli, Mabel Riegelman and a number of others. The tenor battery is the strongest ever brought forward by any operatic organization and includes: Alessandro Bonsi, Charles Delmores, Lucien Muratore, Aristodomo Giorgina, George Hamlin, Emilio Venturini, Giovanni Martinelli and Farrarri-Fontana. The contraltos present such favorites as: Schumann-Heink, Louise Berat, Margaret Keyes, Cyrena Van Gordon, Ruby Heyl and Julia Claussen. The baritones are as notable as the tenors, including: Tita Ruffo, Hector Dufranne, Clarence Whitehill, Vanni Marcoux, Giovanni Polese, Signor. Frederici, Nicolo Fosetta, Frank Preisch and Armand Crabbe. The bassos are equally stalwart tonalists: Allen Hinckley, Gustav Huberdeau, Constantin Nicolay, Vittorio Trevisan and Henri Scott.

The regular repertoire will embrace: (Italian), "Barbiere di Siviglia," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "Pagliacci," "Cavalieri," "Rigoletto," "Hamlet," "Tosca," "Trovatore," "La Boheme," "Jewels of the Madonna," "Il Traviata." (French), "Jongleur de Notre Dame," "Carmen," "Louise," "Thasis," "Samson," "Herodiade." (German), "Tristan and Isolde," "Lohengrin," "Die Walkeure," and "Parsifal."

A repertoire of English opera has been arranged for Saturday evenings and will include: "Hansel and Gretel," "Cinderella," "Carmen," "Tales of Hoffman," "Marta," "Mignon," "Faust," "Cricket on the Hearth," "Natoma," "The Lovers Quarrel," "Cavalieri-Rusticana" and "The Secret of Suzanne."

There will be notable revivals of: "Fedora"—Muratore and Cavalieri; "Gioconda"—Bassi, Ruffo, White and Claussen; "Manon"—Garden and Bonci; "Don Giovanno"—Ruffo, Giorgina and Dufranne; "Linda di Chamonie"—Tita Ruffo and Rosa Raisa; "Puritani"—Bonci and Macbeth; "Pelleas and Melisandre"—Garden and Martinelli; "Madame Butterfly"—Amedo Bassi and

It was at the breakfast table that the dear Lady spoke to the opposite end of the table in this wise: "Father, can't you take us for a drive up the Bottom Road before you go to the office? It's a fine morning and we may not have another such. I can see that the Elderly Person wants to go. Any reason why we shouldn't drive?"

The Elderly Person made his eyes behave by attentively regarding his porridge, very much as a child does who is fearful of showing too much eagerness and so upsetting a prospective cup of happiness. As becomes all household heads, there was no immediate answer, and psychological forces were kept busy in rushing first aid toward a possibly injured suggestion. Then the guarded "I guess so" slipped out impersonally, the aids sped back to their stalls to recuperate, and there was a distinct air of anticipation during the rest of the meal.

The Elderly Person had been having a species of interview with the Bottom that morning early. One of those calls which you hear often but do not always heed, intimated that there might be something worth seeing from the window in the guest room he was tenanting. The events of the night before were rather unforgettable, and perhaps the whippoorwill's song sounding far away across the wide valley was ringing yet. Those birds are so unstoppable once they get going. The picnic had been a success and "Sunset Hill" all that its friends had pictured it. The birds had sung their sleepy songs just as promised, and the glow and flush of the setting sun put forth a light which was never on sea or land, as Wordsworth says. And the lunch among the bunch berries enlivened by the friendly repartee, had been unhesitatingly good. But the mosquitos had resented the intrusion into their premises and bitten furiously. And the young woman who had once had an experience with chiggers could not be sure that those unwelcome guests were not present. And the burning civic question as to the need of public playgrounds obtruded itself into the conversational landscape. These had shortened the sojourn but lengthened the ride homeward through the gathering night. And the comradeship of the man at the brakes was of that sort which never fails even though the spoken words were few. While the Elderly Person lay there drowsing over these things, the whistle of a train sounding long and echoing far out through the stillness had served to waken him so fully that he rose up to see what he might see, just like the bears which went over to Charleston in the old song.

The Bottom was the lowland to the north of the city which of itself was sited on many hills. The yearly spring overflow of the river running by had in a way hampered the use of this land for the activities of trade, and so the growth had not gone very much beyond the bluffs at first. Lumber mills and factories which could be erected on piles pioneered the way in due time, however, and a brave railway put its roadbed up on embankments and later on set up its roundhouse there, too. But for the most part the chances were taken by small farmers in a speculative way, and that left large spaces to be covered by the willows and other quick-growing shrubs and trees. In the fresh morning light these all shone with a fresh, crisp rustling green, along whose edges and between the islands further away the bayous and sloughs lay like silver ribbons. The train rattled by, leaving in its wake a heavy roll of purple smoke. This floated and drifted into the pockets of the greenery and slowly dissolved from a thick mass into a delicate haze which undulated like a gauzy scarf in a gentle wind. Across this slanted the first long streamers of the sunlight's soft gold, tinting and irradiating the haze with a thousand evanescent shades of color. . . . There were many lines of travel toward the lowlands, but there was but one bottom road after all. All other routes converged to it, and by this token it was capitalized into the Bottom Road. The motor car whirled down the streets and then turned sharply into a by-street which soon became a rocky ledge cut out of the steep bluff. On the bluff's summit and following its circle, homes were perched in plenty. Looking up at them their position seemed precarious, as though a good stiff wind might tip them over during some of its pranks. The growth on the bluff was a superb tangle. All sorts of trees dug their roots into the veins of the rock and tossed branches far and wide with confidence. To this challenge the wild grapevines had responded and run up the trunks and ledges and wherever a foothold was found, then sent tendrils out to reach for relatives. They clambored everywhere, making tents of trees, hiding the bruises made by storms, bridging gaps and chasms, flying long ropes and trellises of green, and at that moment filling the air with the sweet smelling savor of its smoky green bloom. At intervals long flights of steps came down from the bluff's sides to the boat houses below, and peeping out from each riser was all the chaotic loveliness of the unrestrained freedom. Every wild thing found a chance to express itself in the tangle, even to a paw-paw shrub which properly belongs further south, and the peach seeds finding lodgment and sustenance had become trees. So, too, the wild plums and wilder cherries, to say nothing of the ever-willing elms and lindens. Oaks of many kinds were there, even to the semi-tropical species which holds out ready arms for the drooping moss. In the latter's absence the wild cucumber and bind weed had scrambled to many points and lent their shades of green as well as floweret spikes and cups to enliven the picture. Later on one could fancy the blaze of gold, lavender and purple that would fill each interstice for the wild sunflowers and countless asters plants were growing vigorously. And the tall sunflower whose round, many petalled head follows the sun in its course daily, and has a pliable stalk that can stand the twisting, had buds ready for bursting. This is the flower of which Tom Moore sang in "Believe me, if all those endearing young charms," and thus christened the criterion for all elderly lovers, because of its loyalty to the same old love right along.

Soon the many turns and angles leading to the converging point were deftly accomplished and the machine bounded into the capitalized road. And this crept around the bases of hills, over the many turnings of the same stream, past farm houses with trim gardens and farm houses where the garden was not; past barns tidy and untidy; past giant elms with wide-spreading branches, growing singly or in groups with that sturdy independence which belongs to elms; past cornfields where the crop had a good start, and past fields where one knew that the adage would not hold good that the corn, to be safe, must be knee high by the Fourth of July; past thickets of young growth fighting and striving for a new start on the site of the parent estate; past hillsides newly cleared where the stumps of trees mourned pathetically; past land black with rich loam, and fields where the yellowish clay poked its non-productive substance into view; past clumps of willows clipped and cut back but still determined to grow; past thrushes singing in treetops and cardinals on bare branches; past silent pools holding themselves rigidly smooth so that the trees and clouds might have a clear mirror in which to make the daily toilet; past meadowlarks on posts and wires; scaring birds from the sun and dust bath that they must take in the middle of the road to rid themselves of the pests which find harbor among their feathers; past wire fences turned into hedges by the fearless bindweed which flatters the senses by its delicate cups held up and encrusted with dew and makes one forget its militancy when once it gets inside the fence; past moving wagons and buggies and carts and a motorcar in trouble by the roadside, where a stop must be made to offer aid, as becomes ships that do not pass in the night; past tempting side roads which lead between hills that look cool and inviting; past snake fences and barbed wire enclosures and even old-fashioned pickets; past horses let loose in the pasture who rush up to inspect and then turn and dash carelessly away with flying heels; past cows busy with the new clover and filling the seven pockets for reflective cud-chewing after while; past barefooted boys and prim little girls en route to school; past the friendly blacksmith shop, the pioneer for the village to rise in that place some day; past shady lanes and through stretches of open roads; past clusters of the fresh-blooming spiderwort waving good-naturedly from coverts, quite tempting as a table ornament for the coming dinner party but discarded because of its sticky stem. And over all the glowing sunshine and soft airs and the smile of abundance and prosperity in the fields of plenty. The terminus is "The Farm," where the land is rich and productive because it has been reclaimed by drainage. The broad bosoms of the softly heaving fields basked in the morning glow. The lines of planted corn were marked and outlined with that precision of modern farming that gives for comeliness. Fences were in order, occasional trees dotted the expanse and far away the sparkle of the blue water wound in and out among the willows. The tenants' cottages stood at intervals as sentinels watching unwinkingly. The lank legs of the windmills held up the creaking wings. The roads crossing and intersecting twined in and out like irresponsible bits of twine thrown haphazard. The lazy smoke rose from the chimneys and roses bloomed in the dooryards. The Elderly Person asked the name of the much-loved place. It had no real name save "The Farm." Well, then, he would give it a name. He would call it "Smiling Acres." At least it would be that to him always, for it fairly shone with the benediction of beauty. . . . .

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

THE NEW CATALOG OF THE AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

The new catalog of the American Conservatory is one of the most attractive books of this kind ever received. From it we gather that the Conservatory experienced the most successful year of its existence. Not only did the enrollment exceed that of any precious one, numbering somewhat over two thousand during the season, but the quality of its student body included a larger percentage of talent than ever before. The graduating class was the largest in its history, representing twenty-three states.

From the catalog we notice that some further additions have been made to the faculty. These include the following: Piano, Frederick Persson, a brilliant young pianist; Florence S. Burke, William Haeuser, Alma Kroeger; Voice, Louise Hattstaedt-Winter; Vocal Repertory, Frederick W. Root; Lecture Department, Eric DeLamarter; Dramatic Art, Miriam Doyle, Edwina Suess; Dalcroze Eurhythmics, Lucy Duncan Hall..

Eric De Lamarter, the capable critic, organist, composer and chorus director, will deliver a series of lectures on the modern art song and Elizabethen Chamber music, which will undoubtedly be of very unusual interest.

A new and important department will be the classes in the Dalcroze System of Eurhythmics, under the direction of Lucy Duncan Hall, an authorized instructor of that system, who enjoyed a thorough training at the main school in Helleran, Germany. From present indications these classes will not be able to accommodate the applicants. A special circular stating particulars will be sent on application.

The twenty-eighth season will begin Thursday, September 11.

THE PERFUNCTORY MUSICIAN

A Paper Delivered Before the National Association of Organists' Convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., Thursday, August 7.

By CHESTER H. BEEBE

My Dear Friends: With a consciousness that the National Association of Organists does not contain among its members such a person as a perfunctory musician, I am asked to remark about that particular class of musicians that does not exist within our ranks. The only excuse I can find for such a paper as this, might lie in the fact that unless we are all mighty careful, we may all become perfunctory musicians. I take it then that this paper is but a warning to those of us who at some time of life, may develop a more or less strong tendency in the direction of "Taking Things Easy."

Following along the lines of my own inclinations, I would desire to preach a little sermon on three texts: "If with all your hearts, ye truly seek me, Ye shall ever surely find me;" "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he;" and it is "The Little foxes that spoil the vines."

Who is the perfunctory musician? I take it that it is he who for some reason or other, is careless, neglectful, lacks interest in the things at hand. I can readily imagine that the perfunctory musician is mentally weak, and morally unfit for his job. I can see him easily discouraged, morally unable to face difficulties and finally falls into a rut where he remains until some kind Rector or music committee helps him out of his difficulties and relieves him of all his responsibilities and duties.

We usually find the perfunctory musician unhappy and disgruntled. Nothing but trouble ever follows him. The thought of a music committee makes him shudder. The Rector always wants the wrong anthem. His own organ playing is never appreciated; and indeed I can easily imagine the perfunctory musician becoming a pessimist.

I have known musicians of this type who had some very high ideals, but who never had the courage to follow after them. "What's the use, it will never be appreciated" is a familiar phrase with them, forgetful ever of the benefit they would receive from their own efforts whether they were appreciated or not by anyone. They have a slight tendency toward honors they never merit.

We fortunately live in an age when we do not gain honor or recognition until we first merit them by doing something worth while. This is an age of action. It ought to be an age of thought. We ought to think and then act. Some of us act, and do our thinking after, thus proving that some of us are not at all times even rational. When the mental processes of the human mind do not follow in their proper order, medical men usually call such conditions insanity. I do not doubt in the least but that the somewhat abnormal mental conditions of the perfunctory musician might have a slight tendency toward some form of insanity. Psychologists tell us that perfect minds do not exist, but that some are more perfect than others, and that in a sense, we are all insane. Possibly as we look back over our lives, we shall see things that would make us all believe that we either are, or have been insane at times at least. I think we can all agree with the psychologist.

Well, then again we have the man who has a slight tendency toward perfunctoriness. He has ideals of a very high order and he attains some degree of success if not great success. Compliments and flattery for his splendid achievements, turn his mind. He sits down, pats himself on the back, and says to himself—"Thank God I am not as other men." There is none, no not one, quite so big as he, none so mighty, none greater. He grows too big to comfortably fill his own hat and shoes, and incidentally his own job. He is too great to associate with the lesser lights in his profession. Soon he loses his associates, who shun him wisely, he loses his job and finally wonders that the world does not appreciate such a genius as he. Let us forget him, poor fellow.

Then there is the other fellow, just the opposite of the two classes mentioned. He is the man with a vision, a mission, an ideal. He is conscientious and honest in his work, sincere towards his fellows, has arrived at that point where he can see and love that spark of good in everybody and everything, smiles and thanks God for the privilege of living. He is the man who curses nothing, pities the mentally and morally weak and blind, and ever at the right times offers the encouraging word to the needy.

Compliments and flattery go in one ear and out the other with him. Criticism, be it good or bad ,he values provided it comes from an intelligent source. He has no time for the idler for he is ever busy; knows nothing but success and is never licked. Nothing of value is too small for his attention. Unfortunate experiences that would be others' failures, he turns to good account and profits by them. He is the man who takes life seriously, realizing that God Almighty is not playing a game of tin dishes and tin spoons with this universe. He appreciates his duty to society and makes the most of his life; he has an ideal and insistently follows it. He writes, and studies, teaches and practices, and when we hear him we marvel and wonder how he does it all. He lives among living truths; dead issues have no place in his life. He forgets the things that are behind and ever forges ahead toward the ideal. He is optimistic, but intelligently so. His is the ideal life in all directions. Such and more besides is the true musician. How magnificently proportioned he is.

Can we ever approach such ideals? It seems to me that we can, if we ever bear in mind the fact that the words of the master musician are just as literally true today as when they were uttered thousands of years ago and that they can apply to present conditions as they did previous conditions.

Listen"If with all your hearts ye truly seek me, ye shall ever surely find me."

We may not all agree as to the application of that magnificent passage of Scripture, but we dare not question the passage itself.

The trouble with the most of us lies in the fact that we seldom if ever really and truly seek things with our whole heart. We sometimes deceive ourselves into thinking that we do, but the fact is that we are invariably dishonest in our dealings with ourselves. We are unwilling to pay the price of such seeking. We are not in earnest. Intelligent seeking with the whole heart, will surely ever find the desired end. If it were true that we might seek things with all our hearts and yet never find them, what a lot of fools we would be.

The majority of us get so very little out of life because we put so very little in. You can't get something out of nothing. Why is it that there are so many people who refuse to believe this. They are everlastingly looking for something for nothing. If we as individuals, put nothing into our own lives, how under heavens can we ever hope to get anything out. Life is an investment and we get interest on exactly what we invest.

Well, most of us at least would like to have our lives count for something. We are honest, or at least we mean to be honest. We are doing all that we can, and yet we do not succeed. What is the trouble now? ?

Listen, let me tell you: "It is the little foxes that spoil the vines." There are little foxes in my life and in your life. You know what they are. Perhaps laziness, indifference, love of ease and comfort, too much trouble to work hard, lack of rational reasoning, lack of intelligent mental training, flattery, etc., and a million other things. These and countless other things have been the "Little foxes" that have ruined the lives of more great men than have ever graced the pages of history. More great men are dead today, dead in every sense of the term, because of the "little foxes that spoil the vine" than you or I will ever have any idea of. There are mental foxes, moral foxes and physical foxes that you and I must fight if life is ever to count for anything. Most of us allow these life destroying foxes to so insidiously creep into our lives, that when life is nearing its close, we pause and look back in horror when we realize what our lives might have been, if we had only done so and so.

How many of us organists allow that miserable little fox "a poor organ" to come between us and success; or some ungodly music committee or Rector just as if that particular church could never contain a new organ, or as if that one miserable music committee represented the entire universe of music committees, or as if that one narrow-minded, bigoted clergyman was the only one you would ever have the opportunity of meeting.

Don't you forget my friend, that if you don't get a new organ in your church in place of that old fire-trap that is there now, someone else who has a little more intelligent determination than you will do it after you are gone. You'll wonder how he did it and it will be to your everlasting disgrace that you did not make the most of the opportunity when it was yours.

Don't you forget either that there are music committees in some churches that have a more well defined knowledge of musical conditions than you ever dreamed of. Find them. If you don't, remember someone else will just as sure as guns.

Then don't you forget that in the place of your narrow minded, bigoted clergyman, you will find some of the most noble, Godly men the Almighty ever breathed the breath of life into. Most of us are so fast asleep that we fail to see these things until it is too late.

I plead with you that you refuse to allow these cursed little things to be the "foxes" that will eventually spoil your lives.

The mighty men of this world have been the men who have had to fight that they might achieve. They have met these sneaking little foxes face to face and have killed them off one by one. If the organ in your church, the music committee or the rector or anything else are proving foxes in your life, get rid of them. If by killing off these little foxes in your life, you have made yourself worthy of better things, better things are waiting for you, but you must first kill off these things that so clinging in their nature drag us down to eternal death.

If you will pardon a personal reference, I would like to relate a personal experience.

Some years ago, this thought of "The little foxes that kill the vine" came to me while reading the Bible as I occasionally do before retiring. As I tried to sleep the thought came to me that I was allowing the "little foxes to spoil the vine" of my life too. I had a miserable organ, a miserable choir and everything that tends toward making an organist's life a burden. It was a long and bitter fight, but today if we should enter that building, we would find magnificent decorations, a beautiful organ and one of the finest choirs in that city.

Practically the same conditions existed in the church I was privileged to serve next, and in my present position there was still another little fox to be killed. The result has been that today I can boast of a truly magnificent church, one of the finest music committees and choirs that ever served any church, and a minister who is second to none in the world. I have an idea that the next "bad organ fox" that comes around, I shall know pretty well where to strike to kill.

As you look at the things in your life that are the "little foxes" they loom up like mighty devils, no doubt. Just keep in mind that they will remain as they are just so long as you allow them, no longer.

The reason for an old worn-out squeaky organ being in your church can be traced to the fact that there is a "fox" lurking around somewhere. It's to your everlasting disgrace if you don't hunt him out.

Every old worn out organ in any church in existence, is a disgraceful monument to the man who can, but simply won't or don't.

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

The success or the failure of your life and mine, can be traced to the fact that we either did, or did not "Think in our hearts."

In the last analysis it will be found I think that the outer man corresponds, or conforms to the inner man. The man who in his heart desires to get somewhere in this life, gets there.

Thinking in a man's heart implies the process of action. No man has any moral right to think unless his thoughts are productive of some definite results. Possibly it is a mighty good thing that the thoughts of some people were never put into action. There might be a less population of the "mother-in-laws" and others who might be competent to do society a good service.

The man who in his heart "thinks" to become a better musician does not turn out to be what we vulgarly might term a "slouch."

The perfunctory musician is indeed a man who does not intelligently "think in his heart." This old world of ours needs men who are doing some downright real honest thinking in their hearts.

The average man is all too unconscious of the value of his own environment and opportunities. How often do we hear men express themselves that they are glad that the day is over,—the opportunities gone, no further chance to get further for that day.

How horrible it is when we stop to think of it, and yet we all do it time and again.

How wonderful it is when we think of it that each day we have handed out to us minute by minute, twenty-four hours, every faction of it full of tremendous possibilities. We can't steal time, we can't borrow time from tomorrow, we can't save time. It is ours and we have all the time there is. There is no such thing as more time. The man who says he will do so and so when he gets more time deceives himself for he has now all the time there is.

What are we to do with this daily miracle (as Arnold Bennett terms it)? This is a question that each one of us must answer for ourselves.

To experience the great things of life, is the privilege of every man if he "wills it so," constantly "seeking and thinking with the whole heart" and killing off "The little foxes that spoil the vine."

There can be no such thing as a perfunctory musician if he intelligently "seeks and thinks" and kills off the "little foxes."

The subject of this paper, "The perfunctory musician," as I have treated it, is perhaps out of place at a convention such as this one, yet I have hoped that it might be the means of encouragement to some one who may have a bitter fight ahead.

I can but trust that it has not been read without some slight value or interest to those of you who have been good enough to listen to it.

Wills.—Miss Rena Wills, one of the best known organists of Akron, Ohio, spent last week at the N. A. O. convention in Ocean Grove.

HAROLD HENRY

The announcement can be made of the imminent recovery of Harold Henry from a severe and sudden attack of appendicitis. It has not been found necessary to operate, in this case, and Mr. Henry will undoubtedly be able to fill his engagement at the MacDowell Festival. The surgeons in charge of his case assure him that he will be able to leave for the cast the beginning of next week.

Facts You Should Know

Before you make your choice is the time to find out all there is to be learned about the instrument that is to furnish the music for your home or studio for years to come.

Find out for yourself not only how pianos are built but how they are sold.

Learn the facts regarding the STARR piano—how it is made in one of the largest and best equipped factories in the world and how coupled with every known factory facility, that counts for efficiency and economy, there is employed the greatest creative ability and the most competent workmanship.

Everything that has been learned in a half century of piano building is utilized in the building of the STARR piano of today to make it as perfect a piano as human ingenuity can devise.

The STARR LINE of PLAYER PIANOS and PIANOS is sold absolutely at ONE PRICE—this means that every purchaser pays the lowest price for which the instrument he buys can be sold.

Investigate before you buy. Call or write for information regarding prices, terms, etc.

AS TO PUBLICITY

A fine serial story, "The Price of Place," is running in the Saturday Evening Post. In the last installment of this story two public men in Washington are talking. It might be worth while even for musicians to read what the wiser one has to say:

"I see you are getting your name into the papers," observed Senator Paxton one day when he and Marsh were talking together.

"Oh, yes," yawned Marsh; "the reporters pester me a good deal."

"Aha!" said Paxton. "So that's your attitude, is it—bothered by the reporters! Well! Well! That, I should say, is a crying shame. There is only one other thing I can think of that equals it for downright discomfort, and that is not to be pestered by the reporters. Jim, you go and take a long look at yourself in the glass. You will observe a rather sturdy, amiable person, who owes about all he has to the reporters who are pestering him, as he says. If the reporters hadn't mentioned you you would be back there in Morganville practicing law. Don't assume with me that pose of indifference to publicity. It may go with some of the weak-minded ones, but never with me.

Let me tell you something. The pose of indifference to what the newspapers say about you is the first and one of the greatest signs of that political hypocrisy that is crystalized here in this Washington outfit. There isn't a man in this Congress or in this government who is indifferent to publicity, who doesn't yearn for pleasant references to himself in the papers, who doesn't read and reread everything complimentary that is said about himself. It is the public boast of one of the biggest men in the Senate that he cares nothing for what the papers say about him, and never reads them; but I know absolutely that each clipping bureau in this country has standing orders from him to send him every item it can find that has his name in it.

We affect to think we are hardened to criticism, and all the time we hate it, loathe it. We smile in a superior way and say: "Oh, well, the boys have to have something to fill up with," whenever they print a pleasant story about us, and privately we gloat over the mention of our names. Quit that pose, Jim! Get all the publicity you can. We need it. It is our staff of life. It works two ways—we love it and we fear it. In the old days it was possible to do a good many things we can't do now, because the reporters were not so numerous and the news-distributing facilities not in their present perfected state. Now those chaps are looking into everything, and you don't want to be pestered by them. You want to pester them instead, or cultivate them rather, for they can make you or they can mar you, and its all in the day's work with those enterprising persons.

Most public men take a wrong view of the business of the reporter. They think the reporter comes to them because he needs them. That isn't it. The reporter comes to see a public man because that is the way he makes his living. He would much prefer to be having his own fun than to be chasing after a statesman, who nine times out of ten he has seized up to a gnat's heel as to his intrinsic bogusness and defects and desires. The man who gets along with the highly essential newspaper crowd isn't the man who patronizes them, which they resent, or the man who affects to consider them of no consequence in his career, but the man who meets them face to face, treats them squarely, tells them the truth and doesn't try to weigh them down with confidences. Reporters don't want confidential information. They want stuff they can print. They are wise. Most of them were here when we came, and many who are here now will be here when we go. They know the game, and it is hard to deceive them. All you've got to do to be squarely treated is to treat them squarely. They want no favors. They don't hanker for your companionship. Quit trying to fool yourself on this newspaper business, Jim, and go out and play it straight. You need all the publicity you can get, if you are square, and you don't need any if you are not square. You can help the first and you can't stop the second. That's all there is to that.

SINGERS AND ORGANISTS

Full often singers are heard to say that their work in church is damaged through the inability of the organist to provide "proper accompaniment." On the other hand it might be well if more singers knew something of a few points which were discussed at the recent convention of the N. A. O.

It was stated at that convention that singers do not study the conditions surrounding their work enough and that many who pretend to be church singers do not even know the most pronounced theological tenets of the church they seek to serve and that they frequently sing, or want to sing, sentiments entirely at variance with the beliefs of the congregation. A second point made was that so very few singers enunciate text in such way that it is understandable or know that the aspect of a solo sung in church should be sacred and that its message should be as sincerely and as definitely given as we expect the message from the pulpit to be.

In other words, church singing is different, or at least it should be different from all other singing. It is a part of the service of the church and should never, under any circumstances become mere vocal display.

PROGRAM MAKING

Somebody at Ocean Grove said that an organ recital should be planned so that one half the pieces pleased the organist, in other words, should represent the best he could do technically and interpretatively, and that the other half should be frankly and freely for the benefit of the audience, i. e., should not be "over their heads" in any particular.

It is a rule which should be observed in all concert giving.

The recital player or singer owes it to his art and to the master composers in that art to present something of the very best, for thus will he prove his own devotion and also educate and elevate his public.

But, if he follow this idea exclusively he will have no practical success for every miscellaneous audience, while it will accept some of the bread and meat music, also demands its salads and bon-bons.

If these be not forthcoming another caterer will be employed.

ORGANISTS NOT GOOD ADVERTISERS

Tali Esen Morgan says that organists, as a class, though the best musicians, are on a par with the old fashioned physician who deems it unethical to advertise; with but a minimum chance of the success which may come to the latter class without this modern help.

He says, that the critics of the great dailies throughout the country do not even know the names of many eminent organists, even great concert organists, and he is absolutely right in this contention.

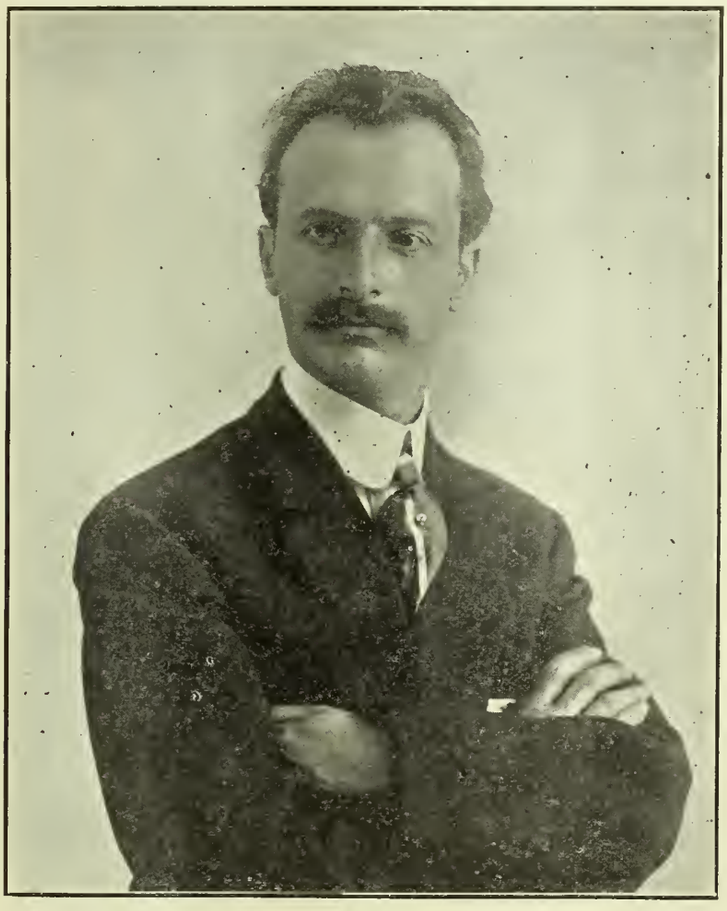
MUSIC IN DENVER

By MILTON B. GRIFFITH

A cursory glance by an entire stranger at the musical conditions in Denver even in midsummer discloses the fact that that city's position on the musical map is placed there in capital letters. The city seems fairly alive with a fine list of first class teachers in all lines of musical endeavor, has many societies devoted to musical study, several up to date conservatories and two symphony orchestras. What other city in this fair land of ours can boast of two symphony orchestras. However, on the latter proposition hangs a tale and the discussion of the relative popularity of two personalities. But we will venture very little on this discussion. Throughout the summer at two gardens vying with each other in the appeal for popular support a symphony orchestra discourses at the same hour on the same afternoon in a finely chosen symphony concert. And both seem to be drawing good crowds too. They say that competition is the life of trade. This may be true, but in this case competition has gone mad and it has rather degenerated into the survival of the fittest. However, there seems to be some relief in sight. In a recent issue of the Sunday Post a local critic thus voices a more healthful view of things:



R. CAVALLO

Fortunately the present month will end the silly business of giving two symphony concerts on the same afternoon. May the absurd idea never be revived. The only good that can come of the practice—unfortunately born of bitterness and ill will—has been to create a sentiment for higher class music, and to put both orchestras on their metal—on their best behavior. The public has responded to good work performed, so that take the audiences together, they have been much larger than ever before during a summer symphonic season.

The rivalry between the factions will continue, however, but on a much saner basis. Symphony concerts will be given during the fall and winter by both organizations, but not on the same afternoons. The Broadway Theater will be the battle ground. Cavallo, it is understood, will give seven concerts during the cold weather, and Tureman eight or ten. Soloists of prominence will be secured for both orchestras. It is probable Louise Homer will be the most featureful of the Cavallo list, while the Philharmonics expect to make an announcement as attractive. The concerts being on different weeks, some of Cavallo's fine performers may go over to the Tureman party for occasions, "by permission," which would be a proper and graceful thing to do. Thus, by courteous interchange, we could always hear good music, by the most skilled and competent of performers, at all the events.

At Lakeside, the Cavallo Symphony Orchestra has held forth, Raffaelo Cavallo, conductor. This orchestra seems to have had a large advantage, having the best selection of men, and with Mr. Alexander Saslavsky, the noted Russian violinist, from the Damrosch Orchestra in New York, for its concertmeister. From all that could be learned, Mr Cavallo has done more for musical Denver in the line of developing a real interest in orchestral music than anyone else. In fact he has been the real pioneer. He is a musician of broad experience and good interpretative ideas and he conducts with authority. During the summer the following soloists have appeared with the orchestra at Lakeside Garden: Mme. Nordica, Henri Scott, Louis Persinger, Alex. Saslavsky, Lena Ellsworth Dale, Bessie Dade Hughes and Edward Fleck, one of the most prominent pianists of Denver. Engaged for the winter season of concerts at the Broadway Theater are, besides Louise Homer: Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, pianist; Francis McMillan, violinist; Charles W. Clark, baritone, and several others under negotiation.

Mr. Cavallo is surely deserving to succeed in establishing his as the permanent orchestra of Denver, and it seems to be the desire of most of the better class of musicians and the prevailing opinion that this will happen.

Mr. Edward B. Fleck was found in his elegant home on High street busily engaged practicing for his forthcoming appearance with the orchestra. Denver is, indeed, for-

He has a long record of student and professional career, beginning with his study at the Imperial Conservatory of Music, St. Petersburg, with Albert Pieczonka, Josef Pembar, Sr., and Anton Rubinstein. As instructor he has been associated with several conservatories in New York. Besides, he has given much time and thought to editing a book on instruction called the "Groundwork of Piano Technic," published by Breitkopf & Haertel.

practicing away for dear life. He is preparing in a most ambitious way for big pianistic work with a very likely prospect of making good. With a most attractive personality, an indefatigable worker, with musical ideas fairly oozing from his finger tips, there is no such thing as failure. He is also doing a large amount of teaching even in midsummer.

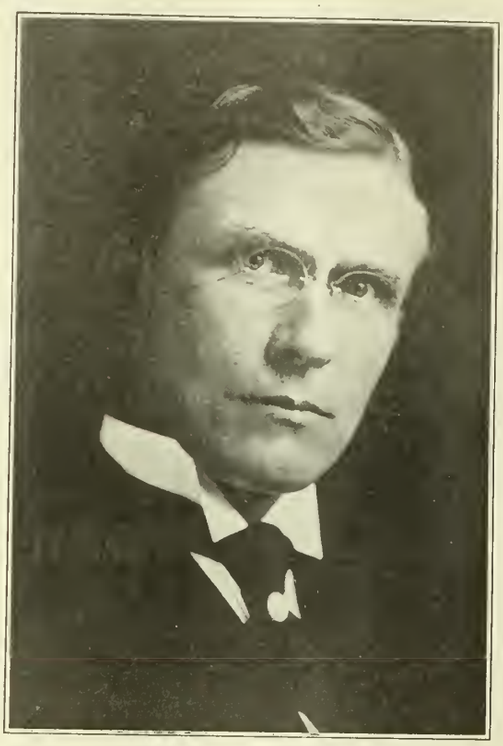
Of the schools, one of the most prominent is the Western Institute of Music and Dramatic Art, located in the Brinton Terrace, East Eighteenth avenue. Mr. Frederick Schweikher, the founder of the school, its president and head of the piano department, has been intimately connected with the progress of musical affairs in the west for over fifteen years. His high artistic ideals, strong personality and lofty moral character have won for him a position of respect and loyalty among those who have dealings with him. His education was secured abroad under such eminent masters as Lebert, Eaisst, Rheinberger, Hieber, Kellerman and others. The advantages gained by such training have, however, only served as a spur to further investigation, especially along the lines of piano pedagogy. Mr. Schweikher fills many important positions in the city, among which are choirmaster and organist at the Central Presbyterian Church, sub-dean of the American Guild of Organists, director of the Arion Singing Society.



FREDERICK SCHWEIKHER

The Institute is incorporated and is in its fifth year of existence. It is delightfully located in what may be termed the art center of the city, has many commodious studios and a recital hall for lectures and student recitals.

With the Western Institute is associated one of the best known musicians of the country in the person of Dr. Henry Houseley. Dr. Houseley has appeared frequently in his manifold talents as organist, pianist, chorus and orchestra conductor, composer and lecturer. Coming from England about twenty-five years ago, he has been among the advance guard in the musical developments of this country. As a teacher of the theoretical branches he finds no superior anywhere. Aside from his arduous duties as instructor, he holds the positions of organist and choirmaster at St. John's Episcopal Cathedral, director of the Apollo Club, dean of the American Guild of Organists.

Assisting Mr. Schweikher in piano is

Some distance from the central portion of the city, but delightfully situated in the residential portion on East Colfax avenue, Mr. Paul Clarke Stauffer held sway with a large corps of teachers in Green Gables Studios.

Mr. Stauffer, the head of the piano department besides being director of the school, begins with this season the seventh successful year in Denver. His thorough preparation with notable teachers, combined with splendid principles of application and adaptability have caused him to reap remarkable results from every pedagogical effort. His school has been recognized by its merit as most thorough. Each department shows a good registration for the fall work which begins September 1. Besides a heavy teaching schedule, Mr. Stauffer has been elected director of the Thursday Music Club Chorus of Golden, Colo., and will be director of the Treble Clef Club (Denver), a new singing organization established by him last year. He will also manage an artist course during the Lenten season of 1914. Associated with Mr. Stauffer in the Green Gables "Private School" are Mrs. James Sinclair Smith, Misses Mary Breen, Winnifred Greene and Filomena Sarconi in the piano department; Miss Frederica L. Brown, voice; Mr. Nels S. Lundberg, violin and 'cello.

The man and the opportunity were apparently well met when John C. Wilcox, well known in the musical world as editor of The Concert-Goer, and, later, as first assistant to John Dennis Mehan, the prominent New York teacher, located in Denver. Mr. Wilcox arrived in the western city five years ago, and within a few months had attracted a large class of students. His following has steadily grown until he now has perhaps the largest class ever controlled by one teacher in Denver. Last season ninety students were enrolled under Mr. Wilcox, and he was able, at a public recital recently, to present a chorus of mixed voices and another of ladies' voices, beautifully balanced and trained, from his own student ranks. Mr. Wilcox has also won recognition in this locality as a choral conductor of the first rank, having directed choral organizations in Denver, Greeley and Boulder, introducing many notable artists as soloists, among them Schumann Heink, Bispham, Pasquali, Dalton Baker, Elsa Ruegger, Cecil Fanning, John Barnes Wells, Louis Persinger and the Flonzaley Quartet. Mr. Wilcox conducts a four weeks' normal class for young teachers each summer, and these sessions have attracted students from half a dozen states outside of Colorado. Aside from his teaching activities Mr. Wilcox is Denver correspondent for Musical America, and a frequent contributor of pedagogic articles to the Etude and the Musician. He is also first vice president of the Denver Musical and Art Society, and, as a singer, is called upon for the most important concert and recital appearances in this community. He

Among the private studio teachers is Mrs. Minnie M. Peck, who has successfully established herself during the past three years in the musical life of the western metropolis. Mrs. Peck was a pupil of Edna Hall and Clarence Hay, New York; was a successful concert artist and leading choir singer in the east. Her high ideals and thorough training have resulted in turning out some fine singers, many of whom hold prominent choir positions. She takes particular pride in two pupils, one of whom, Norman McDonald, bass, is a most successful singer of the city, and another new one from Durango, Colo., who has three-octave range to high F.

Another of the most successful voice teachers in Denver is Mr. R. Jefferson Hall, who has been in the city for only two and a half years, yet holds a most important place in the local fraternity, during which time he has been choirmaster and organist at St. Mark's Church, having a choir of fifty voices. The musical club of this church, under his direction, has given many standard works and staged two annual operas. Mr. Hall is a late pupil of Emil Benkla of London, England, and Haslam of Paris, in singing. He is an associate of the American Guild of Organists and Fellow of the Guild of Church Musicians of London. He gives many lectures on historical subjects related to music and has a large class of prominent pupils holding good positions.

There are many other teachers needing mention who could not be seen during the vacation time or were too busy to admit of an interview. One, however, who should not fail to be noticed is Miss Hattie Louise Sims, who has been one of the most prominent voice teachers for a number of years. She has been director of the choral department of the Tuesday Musical Club.

Of course no account of Denver music would be complete without mention of Lola Carrier Worrell, a composer who lives in the Colorado city but whose songs are known from one side of the continent to the other.

Mrs. Worrell is very prominent in local musical affairs, and few concerts are given but that her work is prominently in the foreground. The following comment tells also how she was appreciated at Central City when she appeared there recently:

Big Recital for Small Town

"An incident which shows the 'spirit of the west' and the desire of western people to hear what is the best in music was clearly set forth recently by a recital at Central City, Colo. The principals were Henri Scott of the Chicago Opera Company, and Lola Carrier Worrell, the Denver composer. Central City is a little mining settlement away up in the Rockies, but it contains as much culture to the square inch as Beacon Hill or Fifth avenue. The prime movers in the recital were Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Lowe, prominent residents and mine owners in the village. Last year Mme. Rappold and Mrs. Worrell gave a recital to a crowded opera house, and this season the Scott-Worrell affair was liberally patronized. Mr. Scott sang two of Mrs. Worrell's latest songs, entitled "Absence and Eternal Love" (from the manuscript) and "The Call," besides songs by Schumann, Gounod and others.

R. JEFFERSON HALL

Mrs. Worrell played some of her own compositions and numbers by Liszt and Schubert. Altogether the recital was a brilliant success and augurs well for Central City, Colo."

A Mountain Musicale

At the Cabin Home of John Roseborough, Estes Park, Colorado, by One Who Was There

We were travelers far from home but asked not water, asked not food, nor craved we either for we asked for music, music, music in the mountains. We had heard he was there—Charles Wakefield Cadman. We searched him out, this master of melody, this tone wizard, this noble-hearted Cadman—then here a miracle. Soft mountain winds carried a message straight into the princely heart of John Roseborough, telling of souls athirst and starving for communion with the gods of music. This John Roseborough of Nebraska, full of chivalry and compassion on wanderers from Indiana, arose and unlocked the wide doors of his mountain palace and, stepping upon his rustic throne, started a call to weary ones to come and partake of the life-giving cup of music. We heard the call, started forth and immediately we saw in the evening light the form of Cadman, Cadman, Charles Wakefield, the beloved, advancing toward our cabin. We waved him welcome, royal welcome. Then up we started to the palatial cabin of the Roseborough, just as purple light and yellow bathed the crest of hoary mountains, kissed the valleys and peaks with goodnight kiss of benediction, a happy parade we were, crossing the swirling, burling Big Thompson River, up the winding mountain pathway to the hospitable house of Roseborough. Up we came, this gay procession, not all musicians but all who knew the moods of music and loved the gods of music. The welcome and the greeting from the precious ones at Roseborough! Then we entered to the hidden sounds of music, music which each heart kept hidden, hidden close beneath each heart throb, for the castle throbbed with love-tunes, love-tunes for all good folks who enter. The company now seated round the great stairway and balcony made charming with the pillowed chairs and railings, warm and cozy from the red flames in the fireplace, lovely to behold with hanging fish nets and the faces of genial pennants waving and the skins of wild things from the mountains stretched against the walls, and draperies, and the lights so artfully shaded, then the motto o'er the fireplace taken from the heart of Longfellow, carved there by the hand of Mrs. Roseborough—

And now to slake our thirst we raise the bowl and there is Cadman at the piano, weaving, weaving, ever weaving—piano his loom—tones his shuttle, tossing tones like great shuttles in and out, till a spell he wove about us, wove a spell like Indian mother crooning, singing to her baby. So the cabin from the stir at entrance lulls and soothes itself to quiet, quiet at the songs he tells us, tells us in his magic weaving. In the fireplace leaping, glowing, dart the red flames of the pine logs—dart the red flames of the spruce logs and our hearts are glowing, leaping with the love fire of the music, music from the heart of Cadman. And now our host leads forth another from the shadow and we behold again the face and hear the voice of Bessie Fox Davis, who at a time long gone sang love songs at a Webster wedding in Chicago. And again she charms us with her soulful singing—songs of Wakefield Cadman, while he, the charming Cadman, played for her until the starlight, moonlight, sunlight, came into our souls and left us happy with the memory of her singing.

Then Mr. Carringer sang several songs without words, while Mr. Roseborough cleverly accompanied, his voice so mighty like the lion wild, though tame and lovely as lambs and roses. Then the prince of all the cabin rolled a fresh log on the red coals and in answer to the pleadings of his company revealed his soul in music splendid, splendid for the soul within it.

Next one Griffith, Milton B., from Indiana, sang a Cadman song, the latest, not been heard before in public, so Mr. Cadman told the cabin, "I Found Him on the Mesa," the accompaniment played by Wakefield Cadman, while flames that leaped from spruce and pine logs played and helped to make a background for the accompaniment and singing like shimmering crepe ready waiting for the embroidery, that tenor voice of Griffith there "inplaced" the brocade, the embroidery, with those tones, tones of music sparkling, glowing like jewels.

We shall never forget that evening in Estes Park in the Rocky Mountains. Our souls were filled to overflowing. A mountain musicale, the remembrances choice as the sainted odors of lavender and thyme. So here's a health to Cadman, Roseborough, Mrs. Davis, Carringer and Griffith, may they drink deep of health wealth and prosperity, and to those of the happy procession that went with me up to the Roseborough cabin and sat in the shadow of the grate fire whose souls were thrilled and ennobled by the music, I wave my hand and say Auf Wiedersehn.

RAVINIA PARK

The programs at Ravinia Park have steadily been growing in interest and the crowds attending have been record breaking.

Several special features were in evidence last week, one of the most popular being the playing of a violin solo on Thursday evening by Mr. Albin Steindel. This young violinist has been a great favorite at Ravinia and his several appearances have been enthusiastically received.

On Sunday evening the third act of "Martha" was given in a very finished manner. The conducting of Parelli proved to be excellent, the orchestra was very good indeed and the chorus was notably better than ever before. The principal parts were well taken care of and Miss Jennie Dufau was charming in "The Last Rose of Summer."

The latter part of the program was played with great spirit and finish and included besides a Strauss "Waltz" and two numbers by Catalani, a violin solo by Mr. Weisbach.

On Tuesday evening Parelli's "A Lover's Quarrel" was given for the first time at Ravinia.

The programs for today and tomorrow read as follows:

Friday, August 22, 1913, 3 p. m.

MACBURNEY STUDIOS

An "evening of songs and duets" was given at the MacBurney Studios on Monday evening by Anna Agnes Bailey, soprano, Herbert M. Bailey, baritone, and William Lester, accompanist, which gave very great pleasure to the usual numerous and enthusiastic MacBurney audience.

These singers have very excellent solo equipment both as regards technic and interpretation, and each of them showed beauty of voice in marked degree. Mrs. Bailey's solo offerings included fine repertoire songs by Manney, Schubert, Chaminade, Cadman and Willeby, while Mr. Bailey was heard in a well selected list from Bennett, LaForge, Homer and Clough-Leighter.

It was in their concerted numbers, however, that Mr and Mrs Bailey shone to greatest advantage, and in the line of duet singing they were certainly in a class which contains few rivals The blend of the voices is very fine and the interpretative thought shows remarkable unanimity. Their repertoire is an extensive one and on Monday included thoroughly representative numbers by Mendelssohn, Lassen, Meyer-Helmund, Campana, Goetz, Abt and Hildach.

Hansen.—Hildred Hansen, soprano and director of the department of music at the Western State Normal of Kalamazoo, was married July 19 at Creston, Ia., to Mr. Roy E. Hostetter, an instructor in the physical education department of the public schools of Pasadena, Cal. Mrs. Hostetter is filling the position of soprano soloist at the North Presbyterian Church on One Hundred and Fifty-fifth street in New York city, during the summer, but expects to be at home in Pasadena by October 1.

Zendt.—Mrs. Marie Sidenius Zendt, who had a very successful season last year and who is alreay heavily booked for the coming season, has sent out an extremely handsome circular.

Peterson—Miss Harriet Irene Peterson has spent the entire summer in the city and has been one of the busiest teachers on the faculty of the Sherwood Music School.

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERT

A hot, humid night is not exactly conducive to great pleasure in concert giving or listening and this was the certain condition of things last Thursday evening at the Warren Avenue Congregational Church, but such was the value and the charm of the occasion that the audience remained intact to the very end of a rather long program and enthusiastic enjoyment was very apparent throughout.

JAMES WHITAKER

Miss Edith Adelaide Kien displayed a very pretty talent in her piano playing, and those who are privileged to know this young lady intimately can tell that she is an organist, a singer, an accompanist and a good teacher besides being a very effective pianist.

On Thursday she opened with a little known work of Hubbard W. Harris, a piece called "Anima," and although rather commonplace in construction one which furnishes considerable opportunity for technical display and which was excellently played by Miss Kien.

Two of the daintier pieces of MacDowell suited her talents splendidly, "To a Wild Rose" being especially charming as she read it.

The Sapellnikoff "Danse des Elfes" was very clear and clean under her facile fingers, and the Grieg "March of the Dwarfs" was invested with fantasy and spirit. The Chopin "Etude" ('cello) was made to sing an entertaining story and the Liszt Etude No. 3, brilliantly played, completed her offerings.

Mr. Alfred Newman gave as his first number the "Prologue" from "Pagliacci" very well indeed and was really excellent in some of the smaller numbers in his second group. His voice is sonorous, smooth and clear and his enunciation is remarkably effective while his stage presence is good and his interpretative faculty well developed.

ALFRED NEWMAN

Chadwick's "Allah" was well done, "The Eagle," by Busch, was distinctively broad, "The Sweetest Flower," by Hawley, was charming, and "The Pretty Creature" (Old English) was fascinating.

Mr. Edward Loeber gave an excellent account of fine native gifts for violin extremely well developed and much under control in two Movements of the Vieuxtemps "Concerto," which indeed he played with unusual distinction, and in his smaller numbers he also was especially excellent. The "Meditation," by Goldblatt again proved the Chicago composer to be a man of unusual musicianship and a very deft pen and the reading of this piece by Mr. Loeber was ideal.

The "Hungarian Dance" Brahms-Joachim, completed the list joyfully and effectively.

Jessie Mack Hamilton was the fourth soloist, and she was indeed a splendid acquisition to the summer's list at Warren Avenue Church. She has perfect poise and a most admirable presence on the stage, and her interpretation of all her numbers was that of the ripe artist.

JESSIE MACK HAMILTON

Her voice is produced easily, clearly and effectively and, especially in its very upper range is of peculiarly sweet quality.

An aria from Reyer's "Sigurd," proved much musicianship and splendid vocal art on the part of Mrs. Hamilton. "L'Oisseau Bleu," by Jaques Dalcroze, was piquantly effective and the Rachmaninoff "Frulingsfluten" was given with breadth and distinction.

EDITH ADELAIDE KIEN

"Before My Window," by the same composer, was also a fine piece of work, and "The Two Roses" and "Ah! Love But a Day," by Hallette Gilberte, proved at once that this writer is superb, especially in the "Roses," and also that Mrs. Hamilton had sensed the meaning and the possibilities of these songs in the fullest degree and gave these to her audience with joy.

Because of indisposition on the part of Mr. Cowan, the work of accompanist for this concert was done by Mr. James Whitaker, and it was indeed excellently done.

Mr. Whitaker is, of course, a splendid concert pianist and has been accredited as such frequently, but at this time he proved himself also to be a very alert and a very musicianly accompanist. His playing of the opening part of the Violin concerto was masterly, the Rachmaninoff "Floods" and the Busch "Eagle" were models of virtuosity and many of the daintier moments were ideal at his hands. Altogether, Mr. Whitaker is a consummate master of ensemble.

ROBERT STEVENS IN RECITAL

The piano recital given by Mr. Robert W. Stevens at Mandel Hall, University of Chicago, on Monday evening, was one of the most comprehensive and thoroughly delightful affairs of the present season, and in spite of the great heat there was an audience present which was not only one of the finest in size of the summer, but which also, by enthusiastic applause and encore demand, proved both that Mr. Stevens is a great favorite at the university, and also that the piano recital is far from being an obsolete quantity there.

Mr. Stevens opened his program with classic simplicity as to style, and in the matter of technic he applied absolutely correct principles to the simple and direct reading of Beethoven and Schumann, composers whose works he treated with sincerity and which he made the audience appreciate at full value also.

Not forgetful of the truism that an audience likes to hear some of the well known repertoire in every program, Mr. Stevens played a Chopin "Waltz" and the well-loved "Berceuse" in a thoroughly poetic style, and by way of virtuosity tossed off, at the close of the program, a scintillant reading of the "Caprice Espagnol" by Moszkowsky.

The moderns were not forgotten, however, and both Debussy and Ravel were represented in thoroughly characteristic fashion while the Ginka-Balakarew "Lark" was played with exquisite finish and by way of encore a "Romance Sans Paroles," by Saint-Saens proved delightful also.

Arthur Foote's Tone Poem "Omar Khyyam" was the greatest novelty of the program and it was played with superb style and proved at once to be a work of most beautiful content and form, while an Etude by Pratt called "On Wings" was thoroughly characteristic and beautiful.

Mr. Stevens has technic in plenty when he chooses to become brilliant or dramatic but his predominating characteristic is to be direct and sincere and also his musical tendency is always to be artistically simple rather than boisterously dramatic.

The result is pure tone always and as this is combined with musical phrasing invariably the total effect is refined to the fullest degree. C. E. W.

CHAUTAUQUA NEWS

On Wednesday afternoon an attractive program was rendered in the amphitheater under the direction of Mr. Alfred Hallam with Mr. Vincent at the organ and Mr. Shattuck at the piano.

Two beautiful selections by Friml were given by the orchestra. The choir sang in a pleasing and artistic manner two delightful songs by Oliver King. Mr. Marcusson was at his best in the rendition of the "Prize Song" from "Die Meistersinger," a selection well adapted to the violin.

"Flora's Holiday," the bright and sparkling song cycle by Lane Wilson, was a pleasant feature of the afternoon, and was enthusiastically received.

On Thursday evening a varied and delightful program was rendered. The orchestra played in charming style Homer Bartlett's "Japanese Reverie," and the "Chinese Episode," transcribed by E. S. Kelley, both of which were enthusiastically applauded by the audience.

The beautiful and tuneful chorus "Wedding Bell" by Mr. Henry Vincent, sung by the choir, assisted by Miss Thornburg, completely captivated the audience with its exquisite melody.

Mr. Ernest Hutcheson, head of the piano department, played two of his own compositions, a "Capriccio" and a "Scherzo." Both were thoughtful and rich in melody, and played with marvelous technique and beauty of tone.

Mr. Sol Marcusson played his own transcription of Greig's "To the Spring," and a "Mazurka" by Earl Drake. Mr. Marcusson's other number, Dvorak's "Humoresque," was given with such exquisite interpretation as to hold the audience in breathless attention.

Mr. Lehmann was at his best in "Joy of the Morning" by Harriet Ware. Miss Janney sang in a pleasing style the Goring Thomas "Aria," Miss Thornburg gave the Woodman's "Birthday" with excellent interpretation. Mr. Frank Croxton, accompanied by the orchestra gave one of the most pleasing numbers of the evening, "On the Road to Mandalay," by Speaks.

The final number of the concert was a beautiful rendition of the Nevin "Suite" by the ladies of the Chautauqua Choir.

ERIE, PA.

Although it is a little early in the season to give many exact dates, it looks as though Erie is to have an abundance of musical events during the coming year. Already it is announced that Paderewski will appear in recital early in October, and shortly after Mme. Frances Alda, assisted by Frank La Forge, pianist, and Cassini, the 'cellist, will appear in conjunction with the Apollo Club. Two other artists who are announced to appear with the Apollo Club during the coming winter are Riccardo Martin and William Hinshaw, the former making his debut before an Erie audience, while William Hinshaw will be greeted by an audience of sincere admirers, his recital of last spring being one of the finest of the past season. Christine Miller, who will make her third appearance in Erie within two years, will receive her usual enthusiastic welcome, and great things are expected of her after her summer in Europe. Among the possibilities are recitals by Charles Wakefield Cadman, the composer, whose music has been greatly appreciated on various programs during the past two years, and who will probably have some very interesting things to tell us with regard to Indian music, and David and Clara Mannes, and song recitals by John McCormack and Alice Nielsen. While all of the above recitals have not been definitely arranged for, still the probability is that Erie will make a place for herself on the musical map during the coming year.

The Erie Conservatory is announced to open in September with Peter LeSueur as president and chief instructor in piano and organ, and Charles LeSueur as head of the vocal department. Among the other teachers mentioned are Miss Ruth Bowers, violin; Mrs. Charles McKean, voice, and Mrs. Winifred LeSueur, elocution.

Albert H. Dowling, Jr., composer, and organist at the First Unitarian Church, is at present working on a new organ suite, "Idylls," and he now has in press two new songs "To Mother" and "A Gypsy Lullaby."

It is interesting to note that the music which Helen Kellar heard for the first time last week, was played by an old Erie boy, Franz Kohler, on his valuable old Stradivarius.

CHURCH SERVICE IN THE OPEN

Streator, Ill., may close the doors of its churches in mid-summer owing to the heat, but its hundreds of loyal souls in the different churches, gather together in friendly spirit and hold union services in the public park, listening on alternate Sundays to the pastors from the several churches. Last Sunday the pastor of the Congregational Church, Rev. Leggette, spoke on the subject, "Shepherding Divine," while the quartet from the Presbyterian Church offered the following numbers:

Kipling's Recessional ..... Schnecker
Sunset and Evening Star ..... Helena Bingham
Even Me ..... Warren

PITTSBURGH

The Pittsburgh Festival Orchestra, Carl Bernthaler, conductor, will close its season next Saturday night after one of the most successful seasons of its existence.

The past week has been marked by the appearances of several splendid soloists, Martha S. Steele, contralto; Elsie DeVoe Boyce, pianist, and Max Shapiro, violinist.

Mrs. Steele appeared Monday evening and is was her second appearance with the orchestra. She sang for her numbers, Goring Thomas' "Ah! My Heart Is Weary," and by request, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from Saint-Saens, "Samson and Delilah."

Her singing, again, was a revelation to those who heard her. Mrs. Steele's voice is rich, warm, and vibrant and in interpretation and sincerity of manner her work has not been excelled by any soloist appearing with the orchestra this season.

Max Shapiro, violinist, who appeared as soloist Friday night, received a reception in the nature of an ovation, and, as this was his fourth appearance as soloist with the orchestra, this season, it spoke well for the young artist. Mr. Shapiro's number was the Sarasate "Fantasy" from Faust. His playing of this number was marked by a very brilliant staccato, splendid technic and a fine singing tone. He was forced to repeat his number, not once, but twice. Shapiro certainly has genius enough.

CATHARINE ELSTON.

MARIE KAISER

Miss Marie Kaiser, who made so favorable an impression in the soprano solos in "The Messiah" at Ocean Grove last Saturday night, began her professional life only last October, but has already gone far in the estimation of the public.

Among the fine engagements fulfilled by her during the season were the following:

Albany Mendelssohn Club.
Boston recital.
Elizabeth, N. J., Spross Club.
Kansas City recital.
Montpelier, Vt., festival ("Erl Kings Daughter" and "Holy City.")
Mt. Vernon ("Martha")
Newburgh, symphony orchestra.
New Brunswick Choral Society.
Patterson Symphony Orchestra.
Princeton University.
Stamford Choral Society ("Messiah")
Washington, D. C., Saengerbund.
Yonkers, N. Y., ("Messiah.")
Yonkers, ("Golden Legend")

She has been successful both in oratorio and concert work, holding her own with artists a great deal older in years and in experience and a very busy season is before her. She has contracted with the Edison Phonograph Company and holds a prominent church and synagogue position. It is the unanimous opinion of all who know her that Miss Kaiser's first season has been an unusual one, and all predict for her a very successful career.

GERTRUDE V. O'HANLON NOTES

The Metropolitan Grand Opera Quartet, which consists of Hanna Butler, soprano; Rose Lutiger Gannon, contralto; Albert Lindquest, tenor, and Hans Schroeder, basso, will appear on the big all-star artists' course in Hutchinson, Kan., the latter part of January. The Metropolitan Grand Opera Quartet is one of Miss O'Hanlon's attractions for next season.

The Beethoven Trio, under the management of Gertrude V. O'Hanlon, will commence its season the latter part of September and will concertize until October 13, when they must be home for the rehearsals of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

HELEN STANLEY

Serenely indifferent to the flittings of fashionable "others;" to Chicago's heat, unrivaled except by that of Ellis, Kan.; not even caring who gets the vote—Miss Helen Stanley, prima donna, is at the Congress hotel, fairly slaving away at the roles she is to sing with the Montreal Opera Company, next season. And mind, Mis Stanley calmly asserts that she is simply "relearning" roles in which we all know she has even distinguished herself before. Like all those who attain the "dizzy heights," Miss Stanley realizes that there is no resting on one's laurels, that content with doing as well as one has done the year before, it matters not how apparently great the achievement, does not bring lasting fame.

HELEN STANLEY

And it is one thing to be diligent when there is the incentive of necessity, perhaps want even, and to strive to achieve that one may rise above a present unhappy condition, but it is quite a different and a heroic matter deliberately to turn away from every lure and fascination of luxury and pleasure within the grasp, even to blind one's self to past success which has been admitted by the entire musical world, to do better and greater things. However, musically, financially, and every way except politically, "that's the system."

But the numerous admiring friends of the Chicago prima donna will not be forgotten and have transformed the already very beautiful suite into a veritable bower with countless American beauties, a graceful tribute to beauty and distinction. F. J. B.

MACBURNEY STUDIOS

Mr. Vern Burnham gave a recital of Schubert songs on last Monday evening which was heard by a fine audience and which showed conclusively that his progress has been steady and consistent.

On Monday his voice was in absolutely fine condition and its beauty and the freedom with which he uses it were strongly in evidence. The interpretative element was also admirably conserved and it was the consensus of opinion that Mr. Burnham presented a splendid program in a very fine way.

The last program of the summer series given under the auspices of the MacBurney Studios will be presented next Monday night, August 25, by Louise Reynolds, soprano; Dorothy Potter, soprano, and Minnie Lee Stone, contralto, assisted by William Lester, accompanist. The program, comprising two groups of solos and three groups of trios, will consist in detail of the following numbers:

Lullabye ..... Mozart
Morning Hymn ..... Concone
Evening Hymn ..... Concone
The Water Lily ..... Abt
The Trio

Snowflakes ..... Mallinson
Liebeslied ..... Dvorak
Happy Song ..... del Riego
Aria de Lia (l'Enfant Prodigue) ..... Debussy
Miss Reynolds

In Yonder Glade ..... Taubert
Cradle Song ..... Taubert
In Our Boat ..... Cowen
Pierrot ..... Johnston
The Trio

Sea Slumber Song ..... Elgar
O, Thank Me Not ..... Mallinson
I Know a Hill ..... Whelpley
Lenz ..... Hildach
Miss Stone

Four American Indian Songs ..... Cadman
From the Land of the Sky-blue Water
The White Dawn Is Stealing
Far Off I Hear a Lover's Flute
The Moon Drops Low
The Trio

JOHN W. NICHOLS

"Mr. and Mrs. John W. Nichols have finished a most successful season at Chautauqua, N. Y., where Mr. Nichols was tenor soloist. Mr. Nichols appeared in concert with such well known musicians as Ernest Hucheson, pianist, of Berlin; Frank Croxton, basso, of New York City; Sol. Marcosson, violinist, from Cleveland, and many other well known artists, under the baton of the well known conductor, Mr. Alfred Hallam. He also opened a meeting of Missouri people, under the charge of Governor Hadley, in the large amphitheater, by singing the Missouri State song, for which he was greatly applauded by the governor and audience. The following are some of the press criticisms Mr. Nichols received in the "Chautauqua Daily" at various times.

"He is one of the most satisfying singers ever heard here. His voice is pleasing in its quality, sweet and sympathetic to the highest tones and remarkable for its clarity. Such diction is seldom heard. In any sort of a song Mr. Nichols' voice is heard to the farthest points of the huge amphitheater and every word falls clear as a bell.—July 25, 1913.

He sang these songs thoughtfully and with taste, which met the most heartfelt approval of the audience. He was recalled repeatedly and added to the program. The quality of Mr. Nichols' voice and his art were much admired, and in his selections he was greatly assisted by Mrs. Nichols' intelligent and sympathetic accompaniment.—July 30, 1913.

It is a pity the tenor has not more to do in "The Messiah," but what falls to him was splendidly done by Mr. Nichols. "Every Valley" was rendered with style and a display of admirable vocal technique, as was also shown in "Thou Shal't Break Them." His good diction and sympathetic handling of a theme had fine play in "Behold and See."—July 22, 1913.

* * * scored individual hit of the most decided type. Mr. John W. Nichols was prime favorite with the audience. Verdi was partial to tenors and gave them some wonderful tunes to sing. Mr. Nichols sang in the "Miserere" with rare sympathy and in the exacting "Tremble, Ye Tyrants" his voice was robust and pleasing.—July 29, 1913.

Mr. Nichols' tenor rang out bell-like in the songs of the Prince.—July 19, 1913.

Mr. John W. Nichols scored heavily with "The Sword of Bunker Hill," each word being clearly heard everywhere to the delight of the veterans. Mr. Nichols and Mr. Hallam sang a stirring duet, "Love and War" (Cooke), in admirable style, and were tumultuously recalled.—July 14, 1913.

Mr. Nichols sang "Loch Lomond" with a wealth of feeling, and as a second number gave a beautiful new composition "Morning" (dedicated to Mr. Nichols), by Mr. Lynn B. Dana. The number is sparkling and rich in melodic worth and well worked out. Both the singer and the song were received with favor.—July 17, 1913.

Mr. Nichols sang Harry Vincent's beautiful "Love's Day," with feeling, and gave the rippling "Flower Rain" (Schneider) delightfully, the audience following the rapidly sung words easily.—July 24, 1913.

"This was Mr. Nichols' last appearance and he was received with great favor and recalled several times after he sang. Mr. Nichols in the Old English ballad sang with tenderness and charm and in the Venetian song was extremely effective.—July 31, 1913.

The first number was the Handel aria "Where'er You Walk," sung by Mr. John W. Nichols. It was a fine rendition. Mr. Nichols not only pleases as well as ever in Chautauqua, but his vocal work shows the result of musical experience and study since he last sang to audiences here.—July 9, 1913.

Mr. John W. Nichols offered two Old English songs, "The Banks of Allan Water" and "Come Lassies and Lads." Mr. Nichols not only has a fine, clear voice, but is capable of portraying the sentiment in these old songs.—July 10, 1913. (Advertisement.)

SIDNEY SILBER AT NEKRASKA SAENGERFEST

At Lincoln on the occasion of the annual state saengerfest the writer had the good forune to hear Mr. Sidney Silber, the pianist, play the Liszt "Twelfth Hungarian Rhapsody." This he did with the perfect command of technic and the breadth of interpretation which was to be expected of the real artist which he is. That he sustains the same reputation for high standards in the city where he is now at home and is also held in most honorable esteem, was demonstrated by the warmth of his greeting and the spontaneous applause which followed the performance. He played for the encore which was demanded the Chopin "Nocturne in F." In this did his pianistic virtuosity have greater unfolding. The piano—a beautiful Mason & Hamlin—fairly sang to his emotional nature. Certainly Mr. Silber is one of the best examples of the American artist. He possesses, besides all the requisites making him a great pianist, a personality that is most attractive and that intensifies the interest in his work. It is understood that Chicago is to hear a recital by this superb artist on October 19.

In the afternoon concert on the same day a slip of a miss of fifteen—Lillian Cinberg of Lincoln—delighted her audience with a very maturely played violin number, "Hejre Kati," by Hubay, encoring with the Dvorak "Humoresque." She certainly possesses the elements of which concert artists are made. Even now her work is marked by accuracy of technic and tonality, drawing a tone of lovely quality and playing with poise and fine interpretation.

Miss Helen Easterday, a contralto of good promise, was a soloist on this program. She contributed "When the Roses Bloom" (Reichardt) and "When Two Loves Are Parted" (Fecchi). Her vocal equipment is of the best sort, and with very little study she has accomplished much. A sympathetic quality pervades her whole range, which is extended. M. B. G.

MARTHA S. STEELE

The following is some further press comment on the work of Martha S. Steele, dramatic contralto, of Pittsburgh:

The second number of the artist's subscription course given last evening at Masonic Hall offered a program of interest interpreted by an artist of excellent and as her work proved well merited reputation. Mrs. Steele's rendition of her first song group was an exacting test for any vocalist, numbering Massenet's "Elegy," Schumann's "Widening," Dvorak's "Songs My Mother Taught Me," and Schubert's "Who Is Sylvia." Her voice proved to be one of remarkable compass without that throaty quality of the middle range almost invariably marking the powerful contralto, with rare and luscious sweetness in the lower tones. In the "big numbers" calling for the entire range and power of her voice the audience admired Mrs. Steele, but it was in those little songs of her second group, Nevin's "Nightengale Song," "The Wishes of Sans-Souci," and Cadman's "At Dawning" that they were delighted with her. Her work in "The Danza" was effective and worth learning, but the smaller vocal gems representing sentiment with a touch of passion revealed the singer at her best both as to tone, quality and interpretation. So unusual are the endowments of the singer and so sincere and meritorious her work that the event was one of real artistic interest and of distinct cultural value.—Erie Dispatch, Erie, Pa.

Martha S. Steele has a splendid contralto voice, and is well known in Pittsburgh musical circles.—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Martha S. Steele has a fine contralto voice and her singing was a rare musical treat.—Inquirer and Mirror, Nantucket, Mass.

Mrs. Steele scores at Schenley concert. Popular contralto's singing with Festival Orchestra wins approval of large audience.

Mrs. Steele was heard first in the great aria "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from Saint-Saens, "Samson and Delilah," given with orchestra accompaniment.

The number was well chosen, affording as it did full play to the excellent vocal powers of the singer. Mrs. Steele has a voice of great beauty, rich, resonant, and marked by the pathetic quality which constitutes the true contralto timber. Moreover she has temperament and interpretative ability of a high order. The orchestra gave her notably good support. (Advertisement.)

"ELEKTRA" MUSIC

William Furst has written and arranged the music for the production of Sophocles's "Elektra," which Margaret Anglin will present at the Greek Theater of the University of California on September 6. This is the first time that special music has been composed for this one of the Greek dramatist's tragedies. Mendelssohn's musical setting to "Antigone" was used by Miss Anglin when she gave that drama at the University of California three years ago.—New York Tribune.

Emmanuel.—Harrison Emmanuel, one of the better known young violinists of Chicago, appeared with success at the Institutional Church last Sunday evening, the occasion being "University night." Mr. Emmanuel shows very decided cleverness of technic and a breadth of tone fully delightful. Mr. Emmanuel expects to leave for Europe in February to continue his studies under the tutelage of Auer.

Schwartz.—Miss Cora Schwartz, soprano, pupil of Frank B. Webster, has been reengaged as soprano and choir director at the St. Marys Avenue Congregational Church, Omaha. She has a charming studio in the Boyd Theater building, which will re open for fall teaching September 1

Nevin.—Mr. George B. Nevin has just built a fine new organ in his home at Easton, Pa. Mr. Nevin is a composer of church music of note and stands for the best things in the development of the art.

MELBA MAE FRENCH

Music News is pleased to present today a likeness of Miss Melba Mae French, a talented young Chicago girl and to append a few of the splendid endorsements which have been given her work:

MELBA MAE FRENCH

It gives me pleasure to state that Miss Melba French is a violinist of splendid attainment. She draws a beautiful tone and her playing gives great pleasure because of its emotional qualities and warmth of expression. Miss French will be a valuable acquisition to any concert company.

HERBERT BUTLER
Director Violin Department American Conservatory of Music.
April 1912.

Herman L. Walker, Voice Culture and the Art of Singing, Fine Arts Building, Chicago:

Miss Melba Mae French possesses a beautiful lyric soprano voice, ample in range and power, and under excellent control. She is a young artist of unusual musical gifts and ability, having musical temperament of a high order, and sings and interprets with intelligence, fine musical feeling and expression.

HERMAN L. WALKER.
April 15, 1912.

It has been my good fortune to have the assistance of Miss Melba Mae French on several concert programs.

She is a young artist of merit and pleasing personality, and her work never fails to win for her an enthusiastic reception wherever she appears.

Miss French is unusually gifted, as she possesses the rare combination of a violinist, reader and vocalist. With the sympathetic accompaniments played by her mother she is able to give an entire program pleasing to any audience. HUGH ANDERSON,
Basso and Director of Warren Avenue Church Choir
April 15, 1912.

To Whom It May Concern:

It affords me genuine pleasure to say that I am personally acquainted with Miss Melba Mae French and have had the largest possible opportunity to judge of her ability and her personality. She is a young woman of the very highest type of character and possesses unusual ability in the several lines of entertainment which she undertakes. She plays the violin with something more than skill; she puts into it that rare touch of personality which charms and fascinates. She reads very attractively and sings as well as she plays and reads. I am sure any audience before whom she may appear will be more than delighted with her work. Very sincerely yours,

FRANK G. SMITH,
Pastor Warren Avenue Congregational Church.

NATIONAL SUMMER SCHOOL

During the last several weeks Ginn and Company has been conducting its annual summer school of music, in this instance the twenty-seventh annual session. Attending are representative teachers from practically every state in the union, more than four hundred men and women being enrolled this season.

On the faculty are instructors whose names are those of the prominent educators of the country, among others being Dr. Winship of Boston; Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Cheney, New York City; Miss Letha Mc Clure, principal of the public school department at Columbia School of Music; Miss Ida Eleanor Bach of Milwaukee, and Mr. Glenn H. Woods, assistant supervisor of music at St. Louis, Mo., and who will be associated with the University of Chicago the ensuing year.

Interesting and highly profitable, is Miss McClure's class in theory and rhythmic forms relative to public school music especially. Much of the work is accomplished through imitation, and every problem is presented to the child's mind in a song very certainly containing that problem. The child learns by ear analysis that which later is presented to the eye by staff notation; in short learns to recognize by sight what he hears. Miss McClure has enjoyed very great success because of her method and the clearness with which it is presented and explained.

Mr. Woods has decided ideas of his own regarding the training of the boy voice, especially in public school singing. Mr. Woods maintains that the boy should continue singing during the time the voice breaks—not too much, but enough, that later he will not be inclined to discouragement and have a disclination to ever sing at all in later years. "Even if the boy can sing but three notes," says Mr. Woods, "it is better that he do that than discontinue effort altogether."

True, many boy choir directors disagree with this idea, but the fact remains that its originator has had distinctive success through many years with boys of public schools, which must prove the worth of his method.

Other classes in the work outlined are Art of Conducting, Child Voice, Chorus, Ear Training, Harmony, History, Melodic Construction, Interpretation, Methods, Notation, Orchestration, Pedagogy and Psychology, Sight Singing, Voice, and Folk Dancing in its many forms.

Additional to the educational side of the session, numerous social affairs wholly delightful, were arranged. Among others were a reception, musicales, and a trip to Ravinia by automobile.

Concert on Tuesday Evening

On Tuesday evening a miscellaneous concert was given by teachers and students of the school, a special feature being the work of a very large chorus which contained singers from thirty states. This body was under the direction of Frederick Chapman, was accompanied by Glenn H. Woods and did some very good work in two numbers from "The Mikado," and in an arrangement of the Moszkowski "Serenata."

Among the singers Mary Elizabeth Cheney of New York was most prominent, and her work was of a degree of finish to place her firmly in the minds of all present as an artist of the most refined type. Her voice is sweet and full and her interpretative work is of the very best.

The Rachmaninoff "Oh, Thou Billowy Harvest Fields" was sung with great poise and sincerity of feeling and with excellent vocal values while the Massenet "Open Thy Blue Eyes" was given with such grace and charm as to completely captivate the audience, which asked lustily for an encore but was refused because of the prevailing rule against making additions to the program.

Jessie Nichols Baldwin was also thoroughly attractive in her work and pleased the audience very much.

The piano used was very much out of tune, and if some of the singers wandered from the key it is very easy to know their reason. In fact, the piano was so bad as to constitute itself a perfect nuisance, and its use was certainly a great mistake.

Some good accompaniments were played and some which were amateurish to the final degree. Miss Clara Roach displayed very great facility both in her accompaniments and in her solo—the latter would have been one of the greatest pleasures of the evening had it been played on a good instrument.

Mr. Dwight Edrus Cook, a well known Chicago artist displayed a very beautiful tenor voice in "The Messiah" number and was also absolutely in accord interpretatively with the music. His accompaniment was dragged beyond all reason, and much garbled in its most essential parts, but in spite of that he maintained his poise and gave a really beautiful reading.

The program follows:

CHARLES M. JACOBUS

The writer, in a recent tour through central Ohio, had the good fortune to stop at the classic city of Delaware, some 24 miles north of Columbus, and the home of the Ohio Wesleyan University, and found that no small part of this city, with its superior educational advantages, was the Ohio Wesleyan School of Music, and during the short visit was privileged to look over the fine equipment of the school and to meet, personally, the director, Mr. C. M. Jacobus.

CHARLES M. JACOBUS
Director Wesleyan University Conservatory, Delaware, Ohio

The school has a fine corps of instructors, who specialize in the various branches taught in the school, and the splendid new music hall, with commodious studios, practice rooms, and one of the finest ensemble chamber recital halls probably in central Ohio. This hall has recently had a new organ placed on the stage which makes it now complete for concert and recital purposes.

Mr. Jacobus, who is at the head of the school, for many years has made every effort to build this department of the university on a broad basis and, situated as it is in connection with university life and higher mental training, is most ideal as a place for the study of music.

During the years of his service in the school, Mr. Jacobus has had many of the leading artists and musical organizations of the country appear in Delaware and has put forth every aim to give students who are studying in the school the opportunity to hear the best in musical literature presented by the artists of the world. With these ideals and the charming location of Ohio Wesleyan School of Music it takes a prominent place in the state as one of the leading schools.

Mr. Jacobus, whose picture appears, heading this article, is an active musician and has many times been a hearty supporter of the Ohio State Music Association. He is a teacher, who is well-known in the middle west and has many graduates who are holding prominent positions in other music schools and colleges, is a pianist of ability and, during his many years of service in Delaware, has devoted his entire time to the interest of the school together with instruction in the class-room, and the prosperous condition and fine work done in the school is every evidence of the successful career of Mr. Jacobus and his talent as a musician.

returning to America in August, and the tour promises to be a triumph.

The Sydney Herald says: "A rare singer, humorist, tragedian, master of oratory and born entertainer, David Bispham's Sydney concerts reveal him as probably the most versatile artist of distinction, who has ever visited our shores. He is having large and enthusiastic audiences of all kinds of concert-goers, and this new fisher of men embraces big fish and little fish in the sweep of his net. He delights the classicists, while coaxing the legendary 'man in the street' into the joyous conviction that

'Handel and Schumann and all those fellows, are as easy as listening to a barrel-organ in the street, when a fellow once understands them.' At the close of the recitals the audiences are loth to depart, calling and recalling the baritone to the front of the platform—and Bispham is amiable—he responds with the big-heartedness that seems to underlie all that he does and says. He is urgently in favor of new songs, and does much in that way to lift our audiences out of Sydney's accustomed rut. For all that his accentuated success is due, as well, to old classics, in which he is able to demonstrate his high status as a singer."

The Sydney Mail: "His noble voice is of extraordinary range, his enunciation absolutely perfect, his method of production highly cultured, so that after singing eighteen or twenty numbers his voice is as fresh and vigorous as ever. His assertion that the language of Shapespeare and Milton should be quite good enough to use in singing to English speaking audiences was loudly applauded. Certainly, the singer gave an interesting object lesson in how English should be sung. Every word was distinguishable, though there was not the slightest appearance of any striving after this distinct articulation. Interpretation of feeling was the keynote of all that Mr. Bispham did, and impeccable correctness of pitch, delicacy of shading, vigor in declamation, were plainly considered, and rightly so, as being means to an emotional end. Few great artists who have visited us have become as popular as Mr. Bispham. This is due not only to his magnificent voice, and perfect artistry, but also to the charming arrangement of his programs, as well as to his geniality and his readiness to satisfy the enthusiastic (if sometimes unreasonable) demands of his listeners for encores."

The Sydney Sun: "David Bispham has the best of goods to offer. He is undoubtedly one of the finest artists in the matter of fitting the beautiful word to the beautiful note, and also, one of the very greatest interpreters of all the schools of songs, who has ever delighted an audience in this city. The beautiful legato phrase is there, and so are that rare flexibility, lightness of touch, and power of vowel-shading. His golden voice, with its perfection in the allegro, the exquisite melodic curve in phrase-building, the wonderful ease in singing the equally wonderful sustaining power, and the gift of distinct and cultured enunciation, mean hard, long and earnest work in every branch of the singers' art. His recitations to music are a touch of realism, probably never before equaled on the bare platform of the Town Hall. The opinion is unanimous that as a singer David Bispham is entirely different from any artist who has ever visited us—his platform methods and manners placing him absolutely in a class by himself. He is undoubtedly a singer of rare ability, and an artist of great histronic powers. His recitals have been attended by large audiences, that of June 5th being the largest of the entire season, and one of the largest that any artist has drawn with a classic song recital in this country."

Sydney News: "He created a wish among his hearers, that they could hear him in one or more of his celebrated roles, such as 'Alberich,' 'Wotan,' the 'Dutchman,' 'Kurvenal,' 'Wolfram,' 'Telramund' or 'Falstaff.'"

Sydney Bulletin: "David Bispham's voice has the deep notes of the 'cello, when it travels several fathoms below the middle register, and yet the upper tones ring clear and full. His future appears to stretch ahead across an interminable area of success."

On his return September 1, Mr. Bispham begins rehearsals for the light opera, "The Jolly Peasant," by Leo Fall, in which he is to star, opening early in the autumn. His managers, Werba and Lenscher, anticipate a great success.

Epigrams and Sayings for Young Musicians
by Horace D. Hitchcock
A pleasing gift book for anyone. Unique and original.
The Evening Sun of Baltimore says:
"Mr. Hitchcock's work is more sayings than epigrams, for the author seldom sacrifices a sound truth for a pretty phrase, and that very fact increases their helpfulness to the student of music, for they offer him indubitable wisdom in serious and dignified form."

NORDICA, THE FEMINIST

"They tell me that you are a great feminist, Madam?"

"Oh, I don't know," laughed the great singer, when questioned in Sydney yesterday; "but you all know how interested I am. But, really, I don't know how to begin to talk to you, you who have done so much here in this beautiful country where I am already forgetting that it is winter.

"Our eastern states in America," she continued, "are not, I am sorry to say, going on as fast as the west, but it has to come—it has to come. It has been coming steadily like a tide for years, and now the great wave has burst. It is everywhere; shall I tell you why? Because women have not had justice in the past. Men are apt to talk very grandly of the beauty of motherhood, and the honor of wifehood, but how have they treated both those sacred callings? Very grudgingly, and the result is a general revolt. Women want fair play, and they are going to get it, and look at the splendid women who are proving day by day their capability of government and organization all over the world."

"And you belong to the Suffrage League in New York?" asked the interviewer.

"Really, I just can't remember how many of them I do belong to," was the laughing response; "I've lost count. There is my big free singing class, for instance, in New York, where every girl who wants to join must first join the league, and so we all help where we can."

"Speaking of the fight being put up in the United States, Madame recalled with pride the splendid organization and the beauty of the recent great procession, and the thorough methods of education which the various leagues and clubs were undertaking to bring up the young women of the country to thoroughly appreciate the responsibility of their citizenship.

"We are learning all the time," she said, "and not only are the younger girls getting enthusiastic, but the young men also." "Ah," she laughed again, "the men have been very foolish all these ages. If they had only known how little consideration would have kept us in thrall for all time—and now we are free and asking for, and determined to take a place in the great world's work."

"Madame has arrived in Sydney full of interest in this country, where both she and her niece, Mrs. Baldwin, think that we have

LILLIAN NORDICA

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

By SIDNEY SILBER

"Intellectual piano playing" is most frequently only a device to delude the unknowing and unthinking to overlook emotional defects in the interpreter. Music is primarily THE language of emotion.

"Classical music" when properly interpreted, always becomes "popular music." It requires a great artist, however, to produce this result.

If your listeners admire YOU, it is a sure sign that you have "worked hard." If they have received an important musical message, you will only be an afterthought—a secondary consideration—as you ought to be.

You can not make a piano sound in tune, when it is out of tune; a piano in tune will sound out of tune, when you are out of tune.

A really great teacher is a tonic to his gifted pupils. Many teachers are only poisons; they are "would be great."

In music, beauty is truth—in life, truth is beauty.

The race of "finger-wigglers" is practically extinct—thanks to the "mechanical piano players."

The Muse is a jealous mistress. Once she has enthralled the votary he must serve her with all his heart and soul. Unless he abandon—— for Mammon's sake, this service signifies life-work.

Music is not a dogma, nor a creed—it is a Life.

No piano is too good for even the greatest of artists. How much more is this (or ought it be) true of beginners?

Because a person is music-loving or artistically-inclined, is no absolute proof of his ability to MAKE music; but everybody who makes music must be music-loving and artistically-inclined.

Theory without practice is useless; practice without theory very frequently most useful.

Railroad service and service in piano playing are very similar. There are local trains and local pianists. Neither "go as far," nor as quickly as express trains and international artists. Local and international pianists very frequently interpret the same compositions—but with widely different "style" and "service." Some railroads pass through grand and picturesque countries. Others only through desert wastes—the same with pianists.

done wonders. They are both great walkers, and were at the time that this chat took place on the point of going out into the sunshine.

"With her willowy figure enveloped in a fur coat of particular beauty, which hid what can best be described as a 'duck of a gown,' in which black and white accordion chicon played a prominent part, and wearing a handsome hat adorned with bronze plumes, Madame Nordica looked just what she is, a power on behalf of women, for with her magnetic personality the suffrage forces of America have a very strong card.

"Don't you be in a hurry here," she called after the visitor as the lift arrived to take her down, "Just keep steady and build, build, build, and things will all come right by and by."—Daily Telegraph, Sydney, Australia.

SOFIA STEPHALI

Following is additional comment on the song recitals of Mme. Sofia Stephali:

Sofia Stephali, last night, at the First Methodist Church justified every encomium that has been paid to her by the critics of America and Europe.

Her beautiful mezzo-soprano voice and the sweetness of her presence charmed all who listened, and she won the audience at once to a confidence in her ability as a singer of the first rank.

Her phrasing was of the best and her technic backed a voice of rare charm, great power and exquisite flexibility.

She comes close to the hearts of her audience, not only by her complete mastery of the vocal art, but by the feeling and sympathy that radiate from her personality.

The Pensacola people were fortunate indeed in securing Stephali, for her reputation as a soloist is not confined to this side of the water. Her visit to the city will be one long to be remembered in artistic circles, as she is not only an artist high in her profession, but a thoroughly wonderful woman, in every way.—The Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, April 4, 1911.

Mlle. Sofia Stephali has a beautiful voice, splendidly cultivated and capable of expressing the finest shades of meaning and she is remarkably adept in her interpretation.

Her program was carefully arranged. Songs were chosen from a wide range and almost every shade of human emotion was illustrated.—The Arkansas Gazette (Little Rock), March 9, 1911.

Mlle. Sofia Stephali, the noted vocalist, appeared last evening in a delightful concert. She is the possessor of a charming personality and her lecture-recitals are just as entertaining as they are instructive.

She is well known in Europe, being a pupil of Corelli in Berlin, and her rich mezzo-soprano voice thrills and inspires while her ability as a forum speaker is notable.—The Wichita (Kansas) Eagle, March 2, 1911.

Mlle. Sofia Stephali, the noted European singer, appeared before a large audience, last night at the Jenkin's Concert Hall. Every song was of exceptional merit. Her voice is sweet but powerful and her renditions were very pleasing.

Her child songs, "The Japanese Maiden" by Mrs. Jessie L. Gaynor and "I Wish't I Was a King,' by Helena Bingham of Chicago were the most popular.—St. Joseph Gazette, Febuary 25, 1911.

Mlle. Stephali of this city is having splendid success on her concert tours.

She has just signed a two years' contract whereby she will tour the states and Canada.

Many press notices bear evidences of the work of this fine artist, who is always a favorite with her audiences.

Mlle. Stephali has had training abroad and her success was assured there before she returned to America.

Her beautiful voice and presence place her among America's best entertainers.—"American Musician," April 8, 1911.

Appearing in a tour throughout the United States, Mlle. Sofia Stephali, the gifted artist, endowed with a coloratura mezzo-soprano voice, and equipped with thorough musicianship made a delighful impression.

Each of the songs sung was given with such interpretation by tone and expression, as to make its meaning unmistakable.

The men in the audience were as enthusiastic at the close of the program as were the women, because they said that Stephali had made the meaning of her music clear to them.—The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, April 6, 1911.

One of the most delightful women whom Pensacola has had the pleasure of welcoming, for some time, is Mlle. Sofia Stephali, who, as one of the best known mezzo-sopranos of the country, is causing no end of interest in local artistic circles. An artist to her finger tips, possessed of a delightful personality and wonderful magnetism, she delights every one with whom she comes in contact.

From her earliest childhood Stephali has loved to sing and singing, she has charmed everyone, her playmates, college students and college professors, and incidentally great musicians, before she made her public career, which has been filled with honors and the promise of as many more in the future.

With but little heralding Stephali made her first appearance in Pensacola last night. The hall was filled with an appreciative, a sympathetic audience, to listen to the music of the great American singer, and listening, they wondered at the amazing variability of her repertoire, for Stephali's voice is equally as faultless in Meyerbeer's dramatic "Der Prophet," as in Dick's playful "When Daffodils Unfold."

burgh is a fine one and the incumbent of that position is a great concert organist.

Does one critic in Chicago or any one else here or in any city west of Pittsburgh even know his name?

On the other hand ask any one (multiply this by thousands) to name a fine contralto of Pittsburgh. They will all say "Christine Miller," and why? Simply because Miss Miller has added to fine ability and charming personality the force of much publicity, gained through discreet advertising—A few concert organsits advertise and get engagements therefrom; if more would do so it is altogether supposable that the field of organ recitals might be much extended and that the question of giving "Free Recitals" would solve itself in as much as the real artists would be too busy filling pay engagements to have any time left for the "free" variety and if the real artists ceased giving the free recitals, his brother of humbler rank would soon stop it also.

OUR OWN LINE O'SWIPE

At the A. G. O. Convention Mr. Van Cleve told of an occasion "In Cincinnati" when the choir sang as its offertory, "Crossing the Bar," and this was followed immediately by a sermon on " New Wine in Old Bottles."

According to his own definitiion Mr. Van Cleve is a "Pessimoptimist," and believes in the equal necessity of the bad with the good.

HEARD AT OCEAN GROVE

"Why, Emily, you shouldn't be afraid of the goat; you are a Christian Scientist, you know."

"Yes," responded Emily, "but the goat doesn't know that."

WHAT SHE WANTED

She walked into the public library and sweetly said:

"I would like 'The Red Boat,' please."

The librarian diligently searched the catalogue and came back with:

"I don't think we have such a book."

Flushing a bit, she said sweetly: "May the title be "The Scarlet Yacht?"

Again he looked, with the same result. Then, with her pretty fingers she dived into her bag, consulted a slip of paper, and said:

"Oh, I beg pardon. I mean the 'Rubiyat.'"—Glasgow Weekly Herald.

ABIGAIL RAYMER

Among the younger singers sure to be received in Chicago musical circles with enthusiasm, is Miss Abigail Raymer, daughter of former Alderman W. J. Raymer of Humboldt boulevard, and who has recently returned from abroad where she enjoyed the tutelage of Charles W. Clark.

During Miss Raymer's stay in Europe she covered herself with distinction in several recitals, among others one given under the auspices of the American Women's Club in Berlin. Prior to her return home Miss Raymer toured in Norway, Sweden and England.

Miss Raymer began her studies in Chicago under Mrs. Fox of the Chicago Musical College, where she remained until her sojourn abroad. Frequent appearances successfully made, caused this young woman to be known as a soprano of very superior attainments, and won for her the position of soloist at Holy Name Cathedral in this city.

Miss Raymer will devote her winter to concert work and teaching at her studio on Humboldt boulevard.

Blaaha.—Mr. Wayne Anton Blaaha, a violinist who was a fellow student with Kubelik, Kocian, Ondricek and other famous players in the Sevick studios in Prague, has been added to the faculty of the Hadley School of Music in the Auditorium Building.

Effa Ellis Married—Music News is in receipt of cards announcing the marriage of Effa Ellis to Thomas H. Perfield, the event having taken place on July 30. We extend congratulations to Mr. Perfield and unbounded good wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Perfield.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY

President and Mrs. John J. Hattstaedt of the American Conservatory, and several members of the faculty with their families, are enjoying vacations in the north and west, where they will remain until shortly before the eighth day of September when the work of the school will be resumed.

Mr. and Mrs. Hattstaedt are at their Charlevoix summer home.

Mr. Karleton Hackett, who is enjoying a vacation from his double duties as critic on the Chicago Evening Post and teacher at the American Conservatory of Music, is with Mrs. Hackett and daughter, Miss Dorothy, sojourning in Massachusetts.

Mr. and Mrs. Silvio Scionti are in Manitau, Colo.; Mr. and Mrs. Victor Garwood in Colorado also; and Mr. and Mrs. Allan Spencer have opened their summer home in Wequetonsing, Mich., to a few of Mr. Spencer's talented pupils who are combining work with pleasure and continue their studies under their American Conservatory instructor. Mr. and Mrs. Heniot Levy are in Wisconsin until September. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Van Dusen have but just returned from Wisconsin and Minnesota lakes, and Mr. Van Dusen has already put in an appearance at the conservatory.

FRANKLIN HOPKINS

A considerable contribution to musical literature is the work of Franklin Hopkins, an American song composer. Mr. Hopkins is having published no less than five separate song albums, his publishers being Novello & Co., of London and New York, and Cecil Mackie, Inc., of New York. The seventy-two lyrics contained herein are the product of many years' specialization upon the song form as adapted to English poetry. Mr. Hopkins has always believed that the great English poets have been unjustly overlooked by song composers, and he has in consequence been hard at work upon a collection to which has been applied the phrase, "The Golden Treasury Set to Music." His ideals have been very high, and in choosing for material the poems of men like Keats, Burns, Shakespeare and Byron he has been, perhaps unconsciously, a pioneer in putting the proper responsibility upon the words of a song. Hitherto it has been the almost universal opinion that fully three quarters of the value of a vocal composition lies in its musical setting. Although fully confident of his musicianship, Mr. Hopkins will not put himself on record as to the balance of power which is represented by the poetry of music of his songs. He does maintain, however, that the incomparable poetry of a Keats or a Burns ought to be as interesting with a suitable musical setting as without, and does not forget at all that the words cannot "carry" the music. Those who have heard the work of Mr. Hopkins do not find that the words crush out the music, for they find that he has developed a powerful style of expression, basing his effects upon unity, directness, simplicity and original melodic appeal. Mr. Hopkins's most ambitious work is contained in the "Great English Poets Album," of thirty songs, representing the poetry of Byron, Shelley, Moore, Scott, Wordsworth, Browning, Mrs. Browning, Tennyson, Milton, etc.; practically all the names greatest among England's poets. This album is handled by Cecil Mackie, Inc., of New York. They also publish "The Modern Poets Album," of twenty songs. In this album Mr. Hopkins has used selections written mostly by American poets such as Poe, Whitman, Carman, etc. Mr. Hopkins's Keats album of eight songs, published in London by Novello & Co., is the most unique work of the composer. There is hardly a published song on the market in which the words of perhaps the greatest English lyric of all—John Keats—are employed, since the great difficulty encountered in musically understanding Keats has no doubt prevented other composers from using his poems. How Mr. Hopkins fared in translating Keats into music is well worth the respectful attention of all who enjoy everything new in art as well as those who want to see English poetry used by English and American composers as German poetry was used by Schubert, Schumann and Franz.

AMERICA'S MUSIC BILL

After over two score years' close acquaintance with music in America as editor of musical papers and through careful computation with the assistance of the census bureau in Washington, John C. Freund indicates the tremendous musical uplift of the time in figures that may well astonish, inasmuch as they are based upon fact. He concludes that annually there are spent on all forms of music in the United States, exclusive of the so-called musical comedies, an extraordinary figure that aggregates nearly $600,000,000. He itemizes the account in a general way as follows:

Grand opera, $8,000,000.

Concerts of all kinds, including recitals by artists and symphony orchestras and individuals aggregate $30,000,000.

Church music, over $50,000,000, that is, for organists, choirs and the music they use.

About $30,000,000 for orchestras that play in theaters, in vaudeville and in moving picture shows.

Fully $35,000,000 for the military and brass bands, and upwards of $175,000,000 for conservatories, schools and private teachers.

The musical industries, according to his well arranged tabulation, figure up over $230,000,000; of which the piano account is $135,000,000, church organ account, $10,000,000; sheet music, books scores, $10,500,000; talking machines and music records, $65,000,000; while the musical magazines, weeklies, trade papers and others account for $3,500,000 more.

Editor Freund remarks as the interesting feature of the figures that while a large amount was spent for operas and concerts, it is comparatively insignificant in contrast to what is spent for tuition, pianos and talking machines; virtually all in form of music for the home. In the United States we spend three times as much for music as we do for our entire army and navy. In Germany, which is considered the most musical nation, they spend ten times as much on the army and navy as we do on music.

Mr. Freund, the sage, likewise the editor of Musical America, contrasts the current condition of musical industries in this country today with half a century back, when we were absolutely dependent on foreign sources for our music and our instruments. There are now registered about 250,000 music teachers in the United States. An indication of the vast increase in musical interest as a feature of home and artistic life is currently indexed in the columns of the daily press.

These facts and figures are vastly interesting and the Chicago Grand Opera Company stands in proof for its share of the success of music. Dire predictions were put forth when this organization had its beginning; but, it has gone on into its third year with significant gains that have now placed it upon a firm basis without losses—something unique in grand operatic history in this country.

course of study was four years with Mme. Fannie-Bloomfield Zeisler. But through a period of fifteen years, his development was wonderfully broadened by association with such men as Theodore Thomas, Sherwood, Pratt, Gleason and Godowsky, both as a student and teacher. Before the age of twenty he was chosen as instructor at the Chicago Conservatory by William H. Sherwood, with whom he remained over five years. Mr. Stevens continued as teacher at the same institution with Leopold Godowsky for two years.

Upon the removal of Mr. Godowsky to Berlin, Mr. Stevens succeeded him as director at the Chicago Conservatory. In 1898, W. C. E. Seeboeck said of him in Music: "Robert Stevens stands today, a brilliant exponent of musical art in America." Paderewski was so pleased with his playing and composition that he favored him with a private audience on several occasions and advised him as to his style of work. Mr. Thomas for several years allowed him to attend the private rehearsals of his great orchestra—a privilege accorded to no other person. Mr. Stock also gave him special attention in connection with his work in orchestration. Although having been abroad, Mr. Stevens is proud that his musical development was accomplished at home.

The following brief commendations are selected from a long list possessed by Mr. Stevens:

Theodore Thomas: You did very well and deserved success. You should play throughout the country and in all musical centers.

M. Paderewski: There is a genuine musical feeling in that playing. Also the original concerto shows great talent in composition.

Leopold Kramer (concert-meister): It was exceedingly musical. You can attain to a very high position.

Bruno Steindel (Solo Celist): Stevens is an excellent, substantial player.

M. Alexander Guilmant: Charming! Beautiful! It was indeed poetic and very charming.

Clarence Eddy: The Henselt was particularly fine, and the whole performance was a good one.

Leopold Godowsky: The concertos went splendidly. They were really splendid.

Chicago Evening Post: Mr. Stevens demonstrated that he is to be reckoned among the leading pianists of the city.

Chicago Tribune: The success that has marked his career in the past was again demonstrated last night.

Chicago Record-Herald: Mr. Stevens created an exceedingly favorable impression by his brilliant tone and excellent poise.

Denver Republican: Mr. Stevens played the Chopin Polonaise with the greatest success. He is an artist of distinction.

Davenport Democrat: Mr. Stevens demonstrated the fact that not a bit too much had been said in his praise before his appearance here, as he a thorough artist.

Wisconsin State Journal (Madison): While his playing throughout was excellent, he was at his best in Chopin and Schumann numbers, which were received with great enthusiasm. He responded to several encores.

Joliet Republican: His playing was exquisitely finished, thoroughly alive, calculated to the finest nicety, full of warmth and genuine feeling and the quality of his tones and their shading was a most wholesome delight.

The World Herald (Omaha): The Thomas concert was exceptionally excellent both in point of selections and rendition. Mr. Stevens made a decided hit in his piano solos.

Evening Telegraph (Colorado Springs) The concert was an unqualified success. Mr. Stevens upheld his reputation as a player of the highest standing.

University Nebraskan: The appearance of Robert Stevens in piano recital at Convocation was nothing less than a triumph.

Omaha Daily Bee: The concert of the Thomas orchestra last evening drew an audience which filled the house to overflowing. The soloist of the evening was Mr. Robert Stevens. He made a good impression from the outset and the audience was carried by storm.

Colorado Springs Gazette: When an artist has received the praise of players like Zeisler, Godowsky and Paderewski, there is little to be added. However, Mr. Stevens was at his best, showing a wonderful combination of poetry, delicacy and fine feeling, with great power, passion and brilliancy. The audience was fairly spell-bound.

HOMER GRUNN

Homer Grunn, now one of the leading musicians of Los Angeles, Cal., is in the city visiting his former teacher, Mr. Emil Liebling and other friends.

It was the privilege of this writer to hear him in a private recital recently, when he played his own "March Heroic," with superb swing and splendid style.

This work is really a one-movement concerto, it is scored for piano solo with full orchestra accompaniment and has been played by Mr. Grunn with the Los Angeles Orchestra very successfully, although it is yet in manuscript.

It is a work written along very broad lines, the rhythm is extremely definite and the melody line is beautiful.

Mr. Grunn plays it with a wealth of technical proficiency and at the same time he makes it musical in the fullest sense of the word. A more public hearing of Mr. Grunn would be a delight.

The Elderly Person

The fresh wind blew down the lake, and then away off to the west and toward the land of unremembered things, went the heat of the day. Those who affected to be "oldest inhabitants" had pronounced it to be the hottest day they had ever known in those parts But they had good "forgetteries" as well as good memories—a trait not uncommon among elderly persons. But the relief from the exertions to keep cool brought on a lassitude which could be satisfied only with the comfortable bed, despite the very early hour. This may be the reason why the Elderly Person found himself after the required seven hours of unconsciousness wide-eyed and trying to study out things in the semi-darkness. Near him was a casement. At first it had no outline and was but a part of the multiplied shadows which make gloom. Imperceptibly its borders became defined and unwittingly the Tennyson lines as to how "the casement slowly grows a glimmering square" fitted into the space and flitted through the mind. The stillness of the night which belongs to the sentinel stars lost its intensity. Little tremulous sounds of awakening life stirred the quiet so gently as to be almost indistingnishable. Some sort of telegraph service sent the signals along the grass, the shrubs, the vines, the trees. There was no tracing just where the messages came from or which direction they went, but diminutive busy quiverings and shakings and weavings told of the presence of these currents all bent upon fulfilling their part of the relay race which must reach quickly the forces to be aroused. Then as the gentle whirr died down there was the expectant instant that follows a concentrated effort. And the listening envoys felt their own thrill of participation, when, far off in the treetop the looked for signal came. Very slowly, very sleepily and a little wearily as if he really were yawning remonstrance at being called the wood pewee uttered his first note and the beginnings of another day were set in motion.

One wonders at this pewee—mostly as to when he sleeps. His was quite a late, drowsy slumbery call far into the gloaming the night before, and his the earliest sound in the earliest of hours. The song is plaintive, unceasing and perhaps a trifle whiny. The bird seems to have such limitations that the Elderly Person couldn't help likening him to many people who persistently try to sing but who haven't much talent and can gain only restricted hearing, chiefly because of their faithful stick-to-it-iveness. They never became prima donnas or even passable church singers—that resource, too often, of the incompetent. There is a real pathos in their struggles to give what they have. Trouble is they never do really give their best, because there is either a bit of a whine in their style or they sing the same thing so often, or else it sounds just the same. But it is not to be forgotten that they do help in the general chorus of sound and that this may have a certain mission not yet fully revealed. . . . This fellow had some trouble in getting started. Perhaps he had the figurative frog in his throat which often troubles singers in their first phrases early in the morning. Of course he didn't go in for frogs, so his hoarseness was no doubt a piece of undigested worm from the night before supper. He sang the rising and falling notes as though he were practicing, and having the field all to himself he polished away at them until they glided out smoothly and monotonously and with no sleepiness whatever. A comrade in a nearby tree took up the notes, and then another joined in. A new note entered about this time and a robin was wide awake and rattling out his musically impatient questions as to where he could find enough worms and bugs and cherries to feed such a rapacious brood as held wide gaping mouths helplessly at him. It was enough to make a healthy but overworked father take to drink. But he soon recovered his balance and sang his early morning ecstasy of scales in a way to delight his instructor, as well as to make his heirs have ambitious thrills to emulate so cultivated an artist.

But a new sound was in the air as the instants became moments, for things move rapidly when the light once becomes the master of the situation. It was an autocratic sound and near at hand. The Elderly Person remembered the friend who had a chicken farm not far away, and he knew that chanticleer's clarion came from that quarter. It grew more shrill and pronounced with each repetition, as if he were the real descendant of Rostrand's imaginative creation. He practiced his notes as if he might swell them into the mighty paean which should summon on the sun from its bed in the east and bid it soar into the heavens.

It was late June and these three held the field for much space. A squirrel ran up the bark of the big oak tree near the window, making that scratchy sound with his sharp claws. He turned his bright eyes toward the casement with a trim whisk of his tail as much as to reprove the lie-a-bed for missing so much that was going on outside. So the Elderly Person, being ready to learn from every source, took the suggestion to heart and watched the rest of the proceedings from the porch swing. There was a scurry down the steps as he came out the door, and the stripes of a chipmunk disappeared in the grass. It was too early for the fashionable birds, and besides that most of them were not singing in these days when their fatherly responsibilities were practically over. But the catbird, who had honored Miladi with his confidence and persuaded his mate that the thick grapevine near the cottage was a fine place to build a home and rear a family, was dancing about among the boulders singing disconnected scraps of song and then mimicing the cat's long-drawn mew. He perked himself on the sill of the landing and exhibited the bug he had secured, and then flew off to the nest A minute later his song poured out in a perfect torrent of tones, as dextrous as the most elaborate fiorture of a violinist. He tossed off staccati, pizzicati, roulades and double stopping between his phrases of pure melody with the skill of an artist.

The Elderly ears were tuned for the rarest moment and he wondered at its delay. While he waited for what he knew must be near at hand the mind was full of thoughts of other mornings when the sound came first to sweeten and soothe the sickened body and the anxious heart. And then the ravishing notes came from a tall treetop—the wood thrush had preened his golden brown feathers and speckled breast and, being thoroughly awake and absolutely sure of his tones, had taken the forest stage and flooded it with such waves of melody that the other birds perforce subsided into secondary positions. All that had gone before had prepared the way for his entrance, and once his voice had launched the chords of full-throated beauty he held his place unquestioned. The notes were luscious and cool. They had the sound of water in them. They swelled from a throat that could not cramp or strain. At the end of the song came the small reedy clatter. The notes were tirelessly perfect and never fatigued by constant repetition. Somehow the whole scene became cool and delicious and tinkled with sweet bells of harmony. Nearer and nearer came the song and fuller and richer the notes. Another of his tribe took up the tune and answered from a neighborly tree. In a minute or so the two came nearer together and then one flew down to a low-hung branch and, paying no heed to the figure on the porch, sang its lovely song over and over again to a human auditor who could show his appreciation best by an absolute silence.

The two mournful notes of the dove came into the air. The "rain crow" some of the natives denominate this sleek gray-colored bird. But there were no signs of a rain, more's the pity. The hills beyond, seen between the clefts of the trees, were drenched with a soft mist which was even then disturbed by the sense of a factor abroad who would dismiss it and disperse it for its assumption of place. A flicker wakened and flew by, using its metallic voice with a certain tremolo as though it flapped its wings against the tone it made and delighted in the raucous sound waves. A woodpecker tapped on a tree and gave its welcome to the day. The orange and gold of an oriole shot by, a gleam of dazzling color. A grosbeak played among the leaves of a maple but uttered no sound. A splendid tanager, brilliantly red as to body and with shiny black wings, perched and plumed itself on a limb of dogwood. The catbird grew enthusiastic as the first peep of sunlight slanted over the hills. The bees and wasps buzzed and beat against the screens. A white butterfly, out of the everywhere into the here, rose languidly from the ground trying its wings. Finding them equal to the demands made, they flapped lazily up and down and away, without seeming forethought or guidance but without hesitation. Its brief day's journey through life was begun.

THE ELDERLY PERSON.

Facts You Should Know

Before you make your choice is the time to find out all there is to be learned about the instrument that is to furnish the music for your home or studio for years to come.

Find out for yourself not only how pianos are built but how they are sold.

Learn the facts regarding the STARR piano—how it is made in one of the largest and best equipped factories in the world and how coupled with every known factory facility, that counts for efficiency and economy, there is employed the greatest creative ability and the most competent workmanship.

Everything that has been learned in a half century of piano building is utilized in the building of the STARR piano of today to make it as perfect a piano as human ingenuity can devise.

The STARR LINE of PLAYER PIANOS and PIANOS is sold absolutely at ONE PRICE—this means that every purchaser pays the lowest price for which the instrument he buys can be sold.

Investigate before you buy. Call or write for information regarding prices, terms, etc.

OPERA IN NEW YORK

Music News is just old-fashioned enough to believe in the absolute inviolability of a contract. Personally we would rather pay for any amount of "dead horse" rather than repudiate our spoken or written agreement.

Therefore there is but little sympathy felt for Mr. Hammerstein in his efforts to crawfish out of his agreement with the Metropolitan Opera Company. However, there are always two sides to every question, and Mr. Hammerstein seems to have full appreciation of the fact that he has some grievances also, as indicated in the following dispatch, reproduced from the Chicago Tribune:

New York, Aug. 22. (Special.)—Oscar Hammerstein's answer to the Metropolitan Opera Company's injunction suit to restrain him from giving grand opera in English this fall was served on the plaintiff's attorneys this afternoon five minutes before the time for serving the answer had expired. It is drawn by former District Attorney Henry A. Wise, and alleges that the Metropolitan Opera Company "is an unlawful combination in restraint of trade and commerce."

Mr. Hammerstein also alleges that the plaintiff's "wicked and unlawful" acts to drive him out of the opera producing business made him a mental and physical wreck in 1910, when he sold out to the Metropolitan and agreed not to produce opera here for ten years, and that he was not responsible for his acts when he signed the agreement to keep out of opera.

He says further that his son, Arthur, as his attorney in fact, signed the agreement that he was to keep out of opera when he understood that he was to have an interest in the merger of the Manhattan and Metropolitan Opera Companies. He says his love for his son prevented him from repudiating the latter's acts.

Mr. Hammerstein's answer denies all the allegations of the Metropolitan's complaint except that he admits that prior to 1910 he had "acquired skill, experience, and knowledge in the production of grand opera," and he also admits that the opera-going public is only a small part of the general public. He admits that Edward T. Stotesbury of Philadelphia paid $1,200,000 for the Philadelphia Opera House, but says he received all the money and denies that his son Arthur got anything.

Hammerstein says that since the season of 1910-11 the plaintiff, "having by unlawful practices succeeded in driving the defendant out of his business in New York, has raised the price of orchestra tickets to $6 and now feeling secure in this monopoly of said the trade and commerce, has publicly announced that after the season of 1913-14 the charge will be $7.

Hammerstein says finally that by "increasing its charge the plaintiff is guilty of a fraud on the public."

A REQUEST PROGRAM

The subjoined program was given on "request night" at Grant Park last week. Inasmuch as this program represents the actual musical desire of the great public it is worth studying, together with the comment made on it in The Tribune:

"Most all the many requests are for the endearing and everlasting compositions, melodies that were truly inspired," said Conductor Weil. "We can feel assured that the musical taste of our people is of a high character, securely anchored. Think of it, hundreds of requests for such songs as 'Listen to the Mocking Bird,' 'Home, Sweet Home,' 'Annie Laurie.' Not one request for numbers from what are termed 'musical shows,' but several for the operas of the old school by Sullivan."

The following is the "request program:"

March, "Under the Double Eagle"..... J. F. Wagner
Overture "William Tell"..... Rossini
"Spring Song" .....Mendelssohn
"Serenade" .... Title
Sextette from "Lucia di Lammermoor," ..Donizetti
Reminiscences of .... Sullivan
"The Martyr of Antioch," "Trial by Jury," "Pirates of Penzance," "Pinafore," "Patience," "Princess Ida," "Song," "The Distant Shore," "Iolanthe."
Selections from Faust .... Gounod
Gems of Stephen Foster.....Tobani
"Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," "Old Dog Tray," "Ring de Banjo," "My Old Kentucky Home," "Beautiful Dreamer," "Glendy Burk," "Willie We Have Missed You," "Nellie Was a Lady," "Hard Times Come Again No More," "Old Folks at Home."
Festival March from "Tannhauser".....Wagner
"Humoreske" .... Dvorak
Popular Rag "Dynamite" .....Biese
Hunting Scene .... Bucalossi
The morning breaks calm and peaceful—The huntsmen prepare for the pleasures of the chase—We jump on our saddle and our huntsman sounds a merry blast The parties join—Tally-ho—The death—The return home.

The contention that concert givers do not really try to please their public is usually well taken. Of course no artist could be expected to present such a program as the above—but, there are "suggestions" in it nevertheless which might prove very useful.

SMALL MANAGERS IN CHICAGO

A contemporary has risen to the defense of the "Large and standard" managers as against the "Small manager" who is said to "trade on the reputations" of the former class.

Apropos of this attention might be called to the fact that the "Large" managers (presumably all located in New York) have very generally lost all interest in Americanism in art and care nothing for the real music development of the country at large Their whole object is to get as much money as possible out of each community for a foreign artist and after receiving their commissions they care nothing for the fact that the exorbitant prices often paid these artists react in such a way that the American singers and players can secure no adequately paying engagements.

If some of the "small" Chicago managers will carry out to a completion their present plan of "exploiting" newer artists, a younger generation in fact, they will very speedily grow to the place where the descriptive word "Large" must be applied to them instead of that now employed, "Small."

ENGAGE CHICAGO ARTISTS

The editor of Music News received from a New York Manager one day last week a letter from which the following quotation is taken verbatim:

"As regards Ravinia opera, it is not a big affair and I doubt if any of the artists care whether the papers notice it or not. What happens in Chicago cuts but little figure here, as New York news is the main thing."

The management of Ravinia might well take this statement to heart and, when engaging artists for next year, consider the claims of Chicagoans. Jenny Dufau is now, in a sense, a Chicagoan—at least it is understood that she will in the future cast her

SUMMER NIGHT CONCERT

The seventh concert of the series at Warren Avenue Congregational Church was so unfortunately dated as to come in direct conflict with a noisy thunder storm and the attendance was therefore not up to standard, but the program was one of unique values and afforded much pleasure to those real music lovers who braved the rain to hear it.

The first soloist was Mr. George W. Munro, a basso-cantante, whose work on the concert stage has been endorsed many times and who has been found so potent in the studio that his class has long since reached proportions where it is the envy of most other teachers of voice.

Mr. Munro has a suave style of singing and follows a very sincere interpretative ideal, the result being that his audience at once comes under the spell of his art and throughout a program in which he appears, grows more and more enthusiastic over his work as the evening progresses.

On last Thursday he sang Oliver King's much liked "Israfel," Wekerlin's "Minstrel Boy" and the aria "Hear Me Ye Winds and Waves," by Handel, with rare smoothness and great legato as to musical phrase—while the Homer group, including "A Banjo Song," "Dearest," "How's My Boy" and "Requiem" was filled with color and contrast and gave each listener an added conception of the value of the already much-admired composer.

Mrs. Salter's "A Toast," was given with much spirit, and Molloy's "Punchinello" was made dramatically appealing, while "Her Rose" (Coombs), and "Love's Enchantment," by Batten, were fine examples of lyricism—the latter indeed providing for many in the audience, the one finest moment in Mr. Munro's work.

Miss Lola May Buckingham, the alternate singer, is a soprano with great range and power and one also who has added much refinement of art to undoubted natural vocal charms.

Musetta's well known aria in "La Boheme," was sung with distinction, while the group of shorter songs, comprising both German and English text, proved Miss Buckingham a mistress of languages and also the possessor of vocal art in many of its most finished and attractive aspects. "Zueignung" and "Allerseelen," by Strauss, were sung with great clarity as to interpretative thought and much ease as to vocalism, while Hildach's "Little Fidget" (also in German), completed a list of lieder, which was notable in contrast and color.

MacFadyen's "Love Is the Wind," was given with great facility, and in Weil's "Spring" Miss Buckingham touched a note of joyousness which found ready response from her audience and made the number her most popular as well as one of the best done of the evening.

The third soloist was Miss Mary Tris, a former Sherwood pupil who has been in the concert field for several years and who plays with great vigor and virility, while at the same time she has full control of softer graces and mellowness of tonal quality.

The "Cello" Etude of Chopin was given a thoroughly poetic reading at her hands, the "Nocturne" Op. 3 No. 2, was made silvery sweet and musically pure, while the Schytte "Sonata," Op. 53, was the medium through which she easily proved herself mistress of bravoura technic and dramatic effectiveness.

This "Sonata" is a work of the greatest size and importance. It requires every kind of technic for its proper presentment and it is built along such broad lines of musical thought that its interpretation requires ex-

Basic Teaching Principles Used in the Effa Ellis Music Courses

1. Avoid presenting a subject as a mere fact.

2. Avoid teaching one thing in order to teach another.

3. Combine and blend Music Psychology and Pedagogy by means of feeling, reasoning stories and drills or schemes for perfecting.

4. Present music or feeling first if possible, then the reasoning, and finally the drills.

5. Develop through the brief and simple truth —not a story to amuse, but the use of a story for reasoning.

6. Lose no time and energy with useless stories and games.

7. Reasoning must help student to recognize mistakes and show how to correct them.

8. Select a story for reasoning that is:

First—Familiar.

Second—Interesting, not merely amusing.

Third—If the story is only amusing you will not gain the attention of the pupil long enough to make him concentrate. Do not teach before attention is secured.

Fourth—The story must make him think.

Fifth The story must embody all the reasoning for the subject you are developing.

Sixth—The result of this order of development will be memory.

9. Devise pedagogic drills or schemes for perfecting the reasoning.

10. Develop so that there is no perceptible step. The plant does not burst forth with a stem, then a flower, then a leaf; no, the growth is so gradual the step is never seen.

11. Development must acquire orderly mentality.

12. Eye, ear and touch must co-operate.

13. First impressions must be strong and definite.

14. Know the right material.

15. Right material will encourage self-help.

16. Know when each subject has been thoroughly developed.

17. Know what to present for the next subject and when to present it.

18. Present without strain—develop from within.

19. Encourage by inspiring a sense of power and independent action.

20. Present everything under one head at one time. Teacher must not think he is capable of knowing what part of the subject the child is ready to make his own. Present all and he will choose for himself. Two adults may hear the same lecture but come away with radically different thoughts.

21. Classify several things under one head; that is, while presenting and developing one subject, see that it means more than one thing.

22. Encourage spontaneous expression through melody writing.

23. In ear training avoid correcting pupils in first efforts. Teacher will remember mistakes and weak points, and drill in different ways until the result is obtained—too many "don'ts" discourage the effort.

24. Avoid constant criticism; present so that pupil can help himself.

25. Give recitals of original work selected and prepared without the aid of the teacher.

26. Test a pupil's knowledge by what he can do independent of the teacher.

27. Do not explain what pupils already know.

28. Do not explain what pupils may work out for themselves.

perienced prowess of the most pronounced order. Miss Tris made its First Movement broadly dignified and clearly musical, its Second Movement was a veritable song without words, and in its Finale she poured out a wealth of passion and a distinctiveness of style which completely captivated her listeners.

Mr. Phelps Cowan played admirable accompaniments for Mr. Munro and Mrs. Zylpha Buckingham Woodsworth playing for Miss Buckingham, proved herself technically and temperamentally a fine pianist.

ABIGAIL RAYMER

Miss Abigail Raymer, a former student of Mrs. Fox and soloist at the Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago, and who has been abroad studying with Charles W. Clark in Paris for some time, will very soon return to Chicago and open a vocal studio at her Humboldt boulevard residence. Miss Raymer has a beautiful voice and personality and is sure to make a great impression in Chicago musical circles.

ABIGAIL RAYMER

JOHN R. RANKL PRESENTS MISS MARY HOOVER

At the MacBurney Studios on 19th instant, Mr. John R. Rankl presented his promising soprano pupil, Miss Mary Hoover, in recital. There were no vacant seats and the evening would have been complete in its enjoyment but for the fanfare going on outside. In fact, the greatest compliment that could be paid the young singer is one upon her steadiness and poise in the midst of most trying conditions. For the Fine Arts Building fronts Michigan avenue. There was a band concert going on in the shell. And the battle of Lake Erie was being refought on the lake front. And as a consequence a few thousand automobiles were buzzing and tooting also. The cannon and rockets punctuated everything. But they fitted in capitally in one place in the "Madame Butterfly" excerpt, "One Fine Day." Perhaps some of them were in greeting to the return of Mr. Tito Mattei to concert programs. It has been many a day since he figured there. His "Leave Me Not" which Miss Hoover used effectively has all his fine Italian frenzy of sentiment, and the melodic lines flow smoothly and soothingly.

Miss Hoover is a petite person with a big voice. She wins her way by reason of her simple and unpretentious manner, and the sincere way in which she does everything. But she has a fine natural voice to work with, one that is being well cared for as to purity and clarity. Just at present she has not a well defined sense of rhythm and the temptation to be dramatic is not well curbed. These errors were in evidence when she sang the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," in particular. She was at her very best in the Puccini aria. She did it with real spontaneity and fervor and a feeling for the pathos of the text. And excellent also was the Buck song, "When the Heart Is Young." Other well done bits were in the "Fairies" of Raymond, Arne's "Lass with the Delicate Air," Mrs. Salter's "Come to the Garden" and Marshall's "I Hear You Calling me," the latter notably nice.

Miss Grace Grove supported Miss Hoover with accompaniments that were suave and complementary.

Plumb—Miss Esther Plumb, contralto of St. James Methodist Episcopal church, and an extremely busy concert singer as well, is spending a few weeks at her former home, Davenport, Iowa, preparatory to the fulfilling of a long list of recital engagements throughout the country.

The Elderly Person

A true unvarnished tale herewith:

We were so excited about the Saturday afternoon frolic—two wifeless husbands of us. We were going to Ravinia Park to have enjoyment listening to Mr. Stock tell things with his orchestra. And we had a cunning lunch put up. At least the man who put it up called it that. He fixed it at one of the clubs where you can buy things for pennies and nickels and use all the paper napkins you want to. We would get an early start and stay for the evening concert as well, putting in the time between the musical rounds by lounging on the cliffs overhanging the lake. Perhaps we would land on our feet and get a good sunset with lots of clouds and then an early rising moon over the water. And we would pretend that we didn't miss our wives and would make them feel sorry that they had left us, by the highly colored descriptions we would paint of the dancing of Ruth St. Denis. We had a feeling that it would not be quite fair. We learned afterwards that in a vague kind of a way we let that feeling slip into the narration. The wives only laughed at the idea of being at all fretful over anything that Ruth might be capable of doing.

The first rift within the lute of our happiness came when we found out about trains. I guess that's the usual experience of anyone in the city who tries to go out to that park. The railroad tries to prohibit people from going by such inadequate service that you want to use a big, big D every time you think of it. The Lady from Philadelphia says that at Willow Grove Park, where the orchestra has a yearly summer engagement and plays to thousands of people, there is no charge for the admission to the park. The car lines furnish the bands and get their profit in transporting the crowds who swarm to the grounds. It goes without saying that they offer good facilities for getting there. We found that the only afternoon train left at 1:30, reached the park at 2:10, and that the concert began at three—nearly an hour to wait. And the returning train left at 6 or thereabouts. Nice arrangements—not? Therefore we thought we would try the combination of the elevated express train to Evanston with the interurban cars on to Ravinia. This would give us an intimate glimpse of the pretty suburbs through which the latter passes. We knew that we should start about the same time, but there would be something doing all the time instead of cooling our heels for an hour. We made the trip out on the elevated in good shape. We kept gathering up more and more people, however, as we neared the terminus, and they had lunches galore, put up in every conceivable kind of package from a suit case to a paper bag. We were not the only people planning for the evening, you see. When we were unloaded at the end of the line, there were still other people waiting for "The Electric," as it is reverently called by those patient North Shore people. There was a long delay in the train's arrival. When it deliberated in at last it was a single car and full of passengers at that! And there were two car loads of passengers ready to board it. You can imagine the squeezing. Instead of a seat together and looking out of the window at the pretty homes in Winnetka, Wilmette, Kenilworth and Glencoe, we were glad enough to stand as best we could in a jammed aisle with the conductor walking over our pet corns, as he wormed his fare-collecting way through the mob. And we stopped every other minute when we did not stop every minute. There were cross roads if there were not street corners on which pasengers stood waiting. It was hot inside the car and we were hotter in our own insides where we keep a hottery that has to work hard because it dare not boil over. When we finally reached the park it was 3:15. No use to tell me we would have done better to go on the 1:30 train and wait the hour. We know that now, and are only telling of it as a chastened experience to warn other innocents from a mirage that looks inviting and isn't.

It's pretty hard to get into the spirit of the music when you are so irritated, isn't it? We weren't any different from other creatures, so we cooled down soon as we could and really did forget our discomfort in the beauty of the place and of the music. It is a naturally lovely spot and the adapting of it for recreation purposes has not spoiled it. It is so fascinating that the wonder grows that no practical deal has been made whereby the attractiveness could be fully utilized and the big public, that would love it and what it stands for, give it the patronage which would make it successful financially. Surely some day it will be properly promoted. As it is now it has just a handful of the people who would crowd to it if it were accessible. Everybody tries each season to go once or twice, despite the difficulties. But they would go every week if they didn't have to incur a day's journey each time. It is really too far even for the distance-cutting motor car. These are pretty apt to stop half way—at the Bismarck—which is artificial after all. Ravinia is wild and adorable in itself.

After the concert we ambled over to the shore. I felt that I knew an exclusive nook where there had once been room for just two to have a good respite. But when we drew near we found that "Private. No Trespassing" sign which I always respect. I have trouble enough at my own little lodge in the wilderness to secure privacy, and I know better than to crowd in when I'm told to keep out. So we found a declivity, down which we could scramble to the beach. Then we sent all the wireless telegrams we could invent to the people who told us not to trespass. For we were on a little edge of projecting shore which caught the rather light breeze and were infinitely more comfortable because of this and the grateful shade of the cliffs. We had our lunch and burned our debris and smoked our pipes contentedly. We talked when we pleased and were silent a good deal of the time, lying flat on our backs on the dry sand looking up at the floating islands in the sky and listening to the comfortable swish of the moving water. There were steamers way out in mid-lake and their long funnels of smoke drifted and folded into layers behind them. A regular old tub of a rowboat had a man and two children in it and the youngsters paddled in and out aimlessly, but restfully because of their care-free spirit. What was the use of having tense nerves when these children were taking it all in so idly? We let the bars of restraint down low, and the animals of relaxation came in and took peaceable possession. . . . .

Was that thunder over there in the west? Well, it certainly sounded like it and the clouds had dark facings where the sunset lights did not penetrate. We took our chances and watched the operations of the giant forces on that old battlefield. We soon knew it was thunder, and saw lightning, but so far north that we could see the density which bespeaks falling rain hiding a portion of the lake and running rapidly eastward. Soon the whole storm was on the lake, covering from sight the boats and smoke. Then the water near at hand took on a glistening but unhealthy light. Far off where the storm was centered the lake seemed to raise from itself a kind of wall which came moving towards us in a gathering ominous mass. Then the still, but shining surface in front of us was dented with little pinpricks of shadows and we felt on our faces a colder air and a more positive power. Then on the face of the water danced and leaped little ruffles and ripples which soon covered its surface and changed it to a dark, intense green. Larger and more vigorous became the ruffles until almost before we knew it the wind was blowing strongly landward and the sea was a mass of tossing waves crested with white caps which beat the shore line and bounded up the sands in a greedy absorbing glee. . . . .

We stayed there just as long as we dared and so did a lot of other self-willed souls who loved the beating of the wind in their faces. We found them lining the hilltop when we had climbed up to its edge. It is the finest sort of fellowship, this love for the out of doors. You don't even need to have a desire to speak to such comrades, so intimate is that sense of sympathy that pervades the fraternity. But in a few minutes the big drops began to fall and then it was a scamper to get back to the safety and shelter of the pavilion. We found long lines of people at the reserved seat box office and it was my turn to stand in line and let my new straw hat get its christening. Everybody was fussing. The cry was either "Is this behind a post?" or "Don't give me one behind a post." One dowager pushed herself in front of me as I got to the little grating and threw down her tickets saying, "I won't have these. They are all bad. I don't want to look at a post. I want to see Ruth St. Denis dance." She would not be pacified, although there was a long line waiting in the rain, while her umbrella dripped rain drops on me. The box office man lost patience at last at the continual questioning and when another woman said, "Is this behind a post?" He said, "Yes, ma'am." So I said to him, "Give me a couple of seats anywhere," and smiled blandly. He looked at me in a quizzical way, felt around in his numerous pigeon holes and then grinned as he replied, "These are the best I can do for you." And they were tip-top, between posts and well forward and altogether comfortable!

Inside the pavilion it is against the law to take off your coat. On the bleacher seats you may do so. Mostly the ladies attending wear no hats. The ushers were kept busy telling the perspiring men to put on their coats. And the woman exulted every time a rebellious chap didn't want to, but had to. It made them think of how they have to remove their hats during the winter at the musical things. Tables are surely beginning to be turned, even in these early suffrage days.

. . . . . .

The tale would be incomplete if it were not further related that the 10:40 train scheduled to take us home in short order, did not put in appearance until after 11, and that it lumbered along like a Lake Street "L." It stopped everywhere a long time and the very longest delay was just before we reached the station. It was useless to look at the watches for we knew it was after midnight. But fortunately Madame was away. THE ELDERLY PERSON.

EMIL LIEBLING

Mr. Emil Liebling, who has just finished an all-summer Normal School, to which was attracted a very unusual attendance of pupils and who is already energetically at work with his class for the new season, is a musician and teacher whom it is a pleasure to know and whose influence on the musical life of the country has been beyond telling.

Mr. Liebling was the first pianist to play Grieg, Schytte and Moszkowski in America, and it was under the baton of Harrison M. Wild in a Mendelssohn Club concert at the old Central Music Hall that the "Concerto," Op. 59, by the last named composer, had its initial performance anywhere, Mr. Liebling being the pianist.

Mr. Liebling was an associate with the late W. S. B. Mathews on the magazine "Music" for many years, and the following estimate of his worth by Mr Mathews is most interesting, especially at this time.

In calling attention to the artistic plans of Mr. Emil Liebling, I shall not delay to make elaborate biographical notices of his antecedents nor of his teachers. When an artist has been prominently before the public for a matter of forty years and upwards, and has come through the competition of active business life into a distinguished and honorable position, it is no longer a question of childhood history or school days. It demonstrates without further examination that the man has in him the somethings which gain and retain respect and professional influence. Hence my present business is wholly with these somethings which have combined to place Mr. Emil Liebling in his present distinguished position to the end that justice may be satisfied, and that those seeking for professional guidance possessing these qualities, may be properly directed.

As concert pianist, Mr. Liebling represents the best modern school. Although actively engaged in teaching, he has a memory of such quickness and tenacity as enables him to retain at his command pretty much all the repertory of all the leading pianists of the day. During his career as artist, he has played in public probably many hundred different compositions, the vast majority of which he would be able to play you off hand any moment you might happen to ask for them. In this respect he stands almost alone among artists, very few of whom will undertake to play compositions which they have not recently studied. Even in the case of those whose record of work extends into the two hundreds of pieces, they rarely are able to give you at call more than a quarter of that number.

A part of this readiness naturally grows out of his daily life as teacher. Standing at the head of one of the largest and most active musical clienteles possessed by any American piano teacher, he is constantly called upon to give illustrative readings of every work in the whole piano playing repertory. For this, the notes brought by the pupil are naturally at hand, but Mr. Liebling rarely has occasion to refer to them. When the pupil has played the work through, it is again fresh in the mind of the master, and he is instantly ready to show all the hundreds of little nuances which go to make up a "reading" of a great work.

Speaking of this teaching, it is commended in every way, not alone by the talent of the students and teachers coming to him for instruction but still more by the musical activity they show in their own fields of labor, where a vast majority of them are leading teachers. They found amateur clubs, circles for musical reading, and get up series of recitals of their own, and of visiting artists. In this way Mr. Liebling's activity extends into many communities where his name and personality are comparatively unknown to the average musical amateur.

Mr. Liebling is one of the modern school of artists equally ready with his pen for all sorts of musical explanations and literary discussion of musical questions. In this respect he stands among the very few writers upon musical subjects in America, who always have something to say, and he invariably says it in a direct, but highly suggestive and frequently witty manner. Hence he is a very suggestive writer, and as one of the editors of Brainard's Musical World, he has a very large public. Some of his most characteristic articles were written for Music, especially "Die Ritter vom Geist," in which he discussed a wide range of musical personalities in a manner worthy of Henry Heine. Both as artist and as teacher, Mr. Liebling belongs to the order of progressive minds, always in search of something new and interesting. The merely old does not find in him its unswerving supporter.

As a pianist he brings to the interpretation of his vast repertory, embracing the very cream of modern pianoforte literature, intelligence, repose and refinement. He is also very successful in his lectures with pianoforte illustrations. A ready talker, au courant with musical tradition and personality as well as musical history, knowing by heart almost the whole of the compositions of all the great writers, and able to play extracts at a moment's warning, he is in a position where very few artists can compete with him in ability of insight, clearness of statement and quickness and amplitude of illustration. Hence for educational recitals, he is one of the very best artists possible to secure.

His compositions are of the highest order of Salon Music, and rank with those of Bendel, Loeschhorn and Mason; especially notable are the Concert Romances opus 20 and 21, a charming Gavotte Moderne, opus 11, the brilliant Florence Concert Valse, and a very pleasing Albumblatt. Mr. Liebling has also edited special editions of the Heller, Czerny and Loeschhorn etudes, and the American History and Cyclopedia of Music.

To add to these particulars, that the personality of the artist is incisive and agreeable, as well as highly stimulating is perhaps superogatory. All this was implied on "a priori" grounds, in the account already made, and in any case the pupil or hearer would easily find it out for himself, as I have in twenty years acquaintance, where I have never found him wanting in the sterling qualities which command respect and confidence between men. —From "Music," W. S. B. Mathews, Editor, 249 Wabash avenue, Chicago.

One of the most important of the many Liebling activities is the fact of his being visiting director of many musical institutions in various parts of the country. Regularly he visits for purposes of examinations and recital-giving many prominent institutions.

For many years he has officiated in this capacity at the Milwaukee-Downer College at Milwaukee, and the Frances Shirmer School at Mt. Carroll, Ill., besides which his present work includes his periodical attendance at Saint Teresa, at Winona, Minn., the Bollinger Conservatory at Fort Smith, Ark., the Oswego College at Oswego, Kan., and the Central College at Conway, Ark.

Mr. Liebling's name is inseparably connected with the Kimball piano, an instrument which he has used in more than 2,500 concerts, in all parts of the United States with unvarying success.

MARTHA S. STEELE

Martha S. Steele, the well-known contralto of Pittsburgh, is spending the summer, as is her custom, in her cottage among the hills on the picturesque Allegheny. Mrs. Steele is a tennis enthusiast and is seen on the courts at the camp almost every day in strenuous games, which she prefers to any other recreation.

MARTHA S. STEELE

This week Mrs. Steele is spending at Chautauqua, New York, and before beginning her work for the season approaching she will go to New York City for a few weeks to coach and look up new songs for the winter programs.

Mrs. Steele has been engaged as contralto in the Festival Quartet which has recently been organized for work with the Pittsburgh Festival Orchestra during the coming winter. This quartet will make its initial appearance on Thursday evening, August 28, in a week of extended work with the orchestra.

MARY CHENEY

Mary Cheney, whose work as a giver of unique song recitals has made her known in all parts of the country, was heard in a group of songs at a recent Chicago concert and at once captivated her audience and at the same time disclosed the reasons for her great popularity elsewhere.

Mrs. Cheney has excellent stage presence and a perfect repose while before an audience, added to which her voice is of exquisite quality and absolute purity and her interpretation of her songs is invariably fine.

In a dramatic song she was found to be broad as to phrase and firm in tone and her climax was built up with power and sustained to full effect. In a more poetic song her musicianship was shown in beautiful coloring and in a blending of moods which was delightful to hear. Mrs. Cheney will be heartily welcomed whenever she chooses to reappear in Chicago.

YOST VISITS SPALDING

Gaylord Yost, the composer-violinist, during his recent trip east, visited Albert Spalding at the latter's summer home at Monmouth Beach, New Jersey. When asked what he thought of Spalding's art, he said, "I consider Spalding one of the world's greatest violinists. In his playing one finds a healthy combination of intellect and temperament and there is a spirit of refinement about everything he does which

SOME RECENT PRESS COMMENT

"Messiah" in Cincinnati

Mr. Tenney's voice is a full, pure tenor, of great smoothness and strength and it was displayed to particular advantage in "Comfort Ye" and "Every Valley."—Cincinnati Tribune, Cincinnati.

"Messiah" in Toledo

George L. Tenney, the tenor, who sang "The Messiah" at the "Valentine" proved to his hearers that his laurels are fairly won.

Mr. Tenney must be ranked with the first oratorio singers of the country, for to a magnificent voice he adds intuition and soulful interpretation.

The great audience that packed the house sat spellbound as he sang with plaintive solemnity the "Rebuke" of "The Messiah," and it was some moments before the audience could break into applause. His work was uniformly superior all through, and at all times he held much power in reserve.

Toledo hopes to hear Mr. Tenney at no distant date in a varied program of his own selection.—Leader.

Mozart's "Requiem" and Parry's "The Pied Piper of Hamelin." First Presentation in America

Mr. Tenney, who has sung in Aurora before, first and always sings with all his heart. The dramatic instinct is strong in this young tenor and whether the pleading text of the "Requiem" or the fanciful prancing piper, it was given with enthusiasm. He has a beautiful voice and capable of many modulations.—Beacon, Aurora, Ill.

"Swan and Skylark"

Mr. Tenney's interpretation of his solo was most artistic and the rendition extremely beautiful. In the obligato his clear, strong voice could be heard above the loudest refrains.—Denver Times.

"Elijah"

George Lee Tenney, tenor, proved himself possessed of a magnificent voice, and scored a decisive triumph.—Waukegan Daily Gazette.

"Stabat Mater" in Decatur

. . . . The pure tenor voice like that of Mr. Tenney's is extremely rare. The ease with which he took the many B flats which fell to his lot places him in that really small list of tenor soloists. His voice has a rich resonant quality which is most telling. There was no straining after effects and everything was done in a musicanly and artistic manner.

In the "Cujus Animam" Mr. Tenney showed great dramatic power and exquisite tonal beauty, which made the number one long to be remembered.—Decatur Herald.

BLISS SCHOOL OF MUSIC

Miss Jennie Maud Bliss, whose work as a teacher of piano has long stood high in Oak Park, has very much increased the scope of her school for the coming season and has adopted the name Bliss School of Music.

The courses are of the best and many plans have been made for concerts, recitals, etc.

The faculty includes, besides Miss Bliss, Edwin Schneider and Anna M. Thompson in the piano department, Permelia Gale and Clara Page Ongawa, voice; Day Williams, 'cello, and Ethel Robinson, dramatic art.

HELEN BRIGHT BENGEL

Mrs. Bengel has spent the summer touring with Brahms Quartet on the Pacific coast and throughout the west. Unqualified success was encountered everywhere, as will be gathered from the following notices given the work of Mrs. Bengel:

Mrs. Bengel was especially pleasing in her solo work, receiving hearty encores.—Clarinda (Iowa) Herald.

Helen Bright Bengel has a contralto voice of fine texture, of exceeding smoothness and full of sympathy.—Idaho News.

Mrs. Bengel's rich contralto melted the hearts of everybody. Her temperament, her tonal quality, her good phrasing and broad interpretations and exquisitely beautiful voice made strong appeal.—Boise Capital News.

Mrs. Helen Bright Bengel is one of Chicago's leading contraltos, and has a voice of great flexibility and dramatic power.—Albany (Oregon) Herald.

Mrs. Bengel's voice was full of appealing sweetness, especially appropriate to her numbers. Her voice was especially beautiful in the "He Was Despised."—Idaho Statesman. (Advertisement.)

EDGAR STILLMAN-KELLEY

In press matter sent out from Peterborough, N. H., is found the following comment on Edgar Stillman-Kelley, one of the composers whose work was used at the Peterborough Festival last week:

Mr. Edgar Stillman-Kelley, two movements of whose "Aladdin" Suite are to be played at the MacDowell festival of music in Peterborough, N. H., speaks appreciatively of Edward MacDowell's influence and inspiration. Besides the interest and enthusiasm Mr. MacDowell displayed in the Aladdin Suite, he suggested the music for "Ben Hur," which still ranks among the most popular as well as delightful of Mr. Kelley's compositions. Mr. MacDowell also attended the dress rehearsals of Mr. Kelley's opera "Puritani," and enjoyed the rehearsal so much that he delayed a trip already planned in order that he and Mrs. MacDowell might hear the first performance of the opera. Mr. Kelley was born in Sparta, Wis., educated in Stuttgart, taking special work under Max Seifriz, director of the Royal Conservatory. Later he spent a good deal of time in California, where in Chinatown he gathered the material for his Aladdin Suite. After several years in California Mr. Kelley went to Berlin where he spent nine years, where many of his first compositions were brought out, and where he numbered among his pupils many of the rising American musicians.

Miss Mabel Wheeler Daniels, who is featured in the Peteborough festival and Mr. Henry V. Stearns, both of whom took prizes in the competition of the National Federation of Music Clubs, did a part of their constructive work under Mr. Kelley. Since his return two years ago, he has had a fellowship in composition at Western College, Oxford, Ohio. Beside lecturing on music there and directing the composition department at Cincinnati Conservatory, Mr. Kelley has done some of his biggest work during this time; he wrote his second symphony, which was performed with great success at the Norfolk music festival this year, under Mr. Kelley's direction.

MADAME NORDICA IN AUSTRALIA

"I can't imagine that we are all walking just feet to feet with our friends in New York."

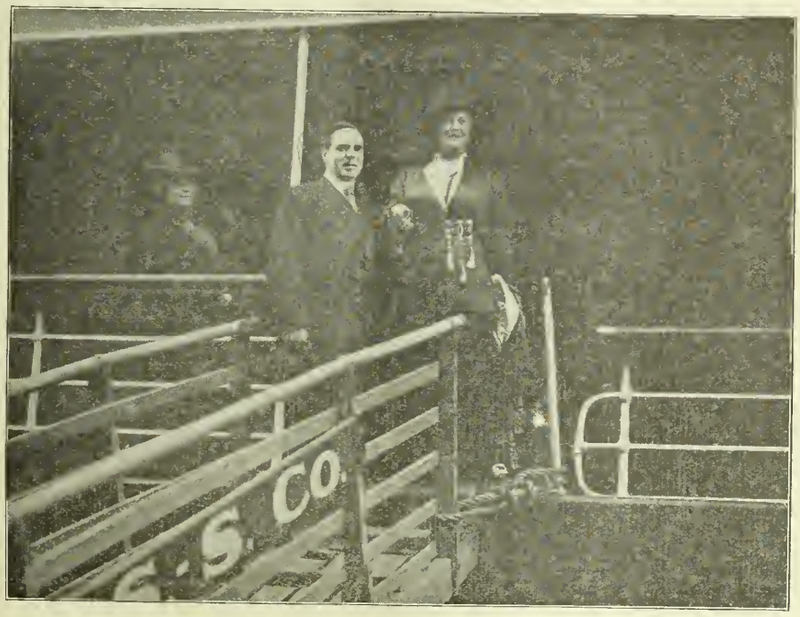
Mme. Nordica, a most buoyant and entertaining conversationalist, a woman of charm with both "a Port and a Presence," as George Meredith phrases it, thus addressed a group of newly-made friends in the vestibule of the Australia yesterday afternoon. The voyage by the Ventura had been delightful, with the exception of heavy weather on Sunday night, and the "green bluffs embroidered with fringes of white sand" had delighted the distinguished visitor as the ship came slowly up the harbor. "The sky," continued the diva, "was like a wintry sky in the old world and yet there was sunshine, and the air was balmy. Truly everything was upside down in Australia." "No occasion for ear-muffs either?" The vivacious lady was assured not, and looked quite joyous at the discovery.

"Yes, the story that my first fee was on a promise not to sing is quite true. We all lived at Farmington, Maine, at an old homestead at which my father, Mr. Norton, lived on his fortune, and played the violin of an evening, whilst my mother, an amateur soprano with a lovely voice, used to sing. I had a gifted sister who at 17 years of age was the soloist in the 'Creation' with our oratorio society. She would study a beautiful new aria, and I would shout it in my most 'finished' Tom-boy style all over the house. Hence my first fee—a tip not to sing! When my sweet sister was called untimely hence, my parents allowed me to study at the Boston Conservatorium, where Mr. John O'Neill tried my voice. Higher and higher up the scale I went, quite unconscious of effort until at the 'high C' the genial professor burst into a laugh of joyous delight. In my girlishness I felt dreadfully hurt for a moment. Only a few months ago I sang many arias to my old friend, now an octogenarian. After three years with him I made a success with the Haydn and Handel Society in the 'Messiah' at Boston, and this won me an engagement with the Gilmore Band for 78 concerts all over the United Kingdom, including tbe Crystal Palace, London, and this tour with my mother paid for my operatic education under San Giovanni at Milan."

"Yes, my connection with England has been very close, and, also, I may say, with the English Royal families. After my early operatic successes in Italy and Russia, my early introduction in London was to replace Mme. Albani, who was indisposed, in the first performance of 'The Golden Legend' at tbe Royal Albert Hall, and this made me so many friends, that the then Prince and Princess of Wales, attended my debut as Violetta at Covent Garden under Colonel Mapleson. I met the Prince and Princess many times after that and I especially recall a meeting at Marienbad with King Edward, to whose coronation, by the way, I had been especially invited. During the last year of his life I was walking with another lady along a woodland path, when he met me face to face with his suite, and as I drew aside, he exclaimed, "Why, it's Madame Nordica." He invited me to sing at the English church at Marienbad after which I joined the royal party at lunch, and his Majesty and all present signed the menu for me as a souvenir. Early in my career I sang at Osborne before Queen Victoria and the Emperor and Empress of Germany, the occasion being a family gathering. The queen sent me a miniature crown in diamonds on a red enameled back, and on her 80th birthday she gave me the V.R. in diamonds with a ribband, and a large piece of her birthday cake. The jewels formed a souvenir of my appearance as Elsa at Windsor Castle with Jean and Edward De Reszke, David Bispham and Mme. Schumann-Heink. My dressing-room was the Rubens Room, and every thing was very stately and wonderful.

"Yes, you are quite right in remembering that I was the first to sing Elsa at a Bayreuth Festival. That Mme. Wagner should bestow such an honor on a foreign singer caused a great stir in Germany; but that lady, strongly resembling her father, the Abbe Liszt, had all the courage of her opinions. She was a wonderful stage-manager, and knew the traditions of every role down to the smallest gesture. Afterwards I sang the role at the Paris Opera, and that formed another talked-of event. At Munich the Printz-Regenten Theater is an exact reproduction in stone of the one at Bayreuth. A thousand marks for one appearance is the highest fee they ever give. But I sang the great Wagnerian roles there for three years just from love of the perfect way the whole thing was done, and even made a sensation by singing the 'Valkyrie,' 'Siegfried,' and 'Gotterdammerung' on three successive nights. The Bavarian government bestowed on me their great gold medal, a rare distinction, which such scientists as Roentgen are proud to possess. I have in my possession the plans for a Bayreuth Theater to be built on 40 acres of land I have acquired on the heights above the Hudson river near New York, to be used as a conservatorium and summer theater. This art scheme cannot be fulfilled until I am able to give it my undivided personal attention."

Mme. Nordica is positive that Wagnerian music-drama in no way injures the voice of any artist whose vocal producton is already properly matured; "but do not spring the knees of your thoroughbred by extending him right out as a two-year-old." Her program on Thursday will open with dainty music preparatory to a big central aria, and this will be generally her art scheme. "You will first hear me through a screen of lacework before the curtain rises on the drama itself," is her picturesque way of putting it.



ARRIVAL OF MME. NORDICA IN SYDNEY, AUSTRALIA

None of the passengers were permitted to disembark until the famous Diva had done so. This arrangement was for photographic purposes, as all the Sydney papers had their photographers on the docks to "snap" America's Queen of Song. Mr. Frederic Shipman, Mme. Nordica's manager, is shown assisting the Prima Donna to descend the gangway.

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

By SIDNEY SILBER

There is no royal road or any short cut to lasting artistic eminence. All great artists have had to progress step by step—Gradus ad Parnassum.

A musical genius is one who CREATES "something novel and original." This "something novel and original" must spring from an INNER NECESSITY. It must not merely be a caprice "to be different."

No pianist is on record as having died "because he knew too much" or "used his mentality to excess." There are, however, thousands of living examples of musically-inclined and talented persons, who never became good or great pianists, because they did not know enough or did not use their mentalities sufficiently.

Your listeners must believe in you before you touch a key, if you are to "get across the footlights" most effectively.

"To make money" is a weak provocation, if it is the ONLY provocation for pursuing serious pianoforte study. The efficient musician and artist is invariably a "money-maker"—under normal conditions.

Think before you act—look before you leap.

In life, we are punished by our sins, not For them. In music, our listeners (provided they are more sensitive than we) are punished both BY and FOR our musical transgressions.

If you are not interested in serious pianoforte study, don't pursue it seriously. If you LOVE such study, you will soon "follow suit."

If you know that you know, everybody who comes in contact with you will also know that you know without your telling them. Your standards must be higher than those whom you meet. They will then "recognize" you.

The impression that concert agencies exist solely for the purpose of "discovering" talented young artists, in order to exploit them, is entirely erroneous. Concert agents take no chances with "unknown quantities" who have no "drawing powers." They lose quite enough money on great artists who "do not make good."

All new pianos have black and white keys and attractively finished cases. The distinguishing superiority lies in the unseen elements—very much the same as in individuals.

In purchasing a piano, you always get that for which you pay. If you appreciate quality and have the price, you must pay for that which you want.

WAYNE ANTON BLAAHA

Mr. Wayne Anton Blaaha, fellow student of Kubelik, Kocian, Ondricek and other famous violinists, graduated with highest honors from the school of the world renowned pedagogue, Professor Otakar Sevcik, at Prague, Bohemia, in 1903, and later served as an instructor in this conservatory.

Mr. Blaaha is a finished violinist and is well grounded in theory and harmony, having studied under Dr. Karl Knittl and Dr. Antonin Dvorak.

While on concert tour through Europe Mr. Blaaha was greeted everywhere by most enthusiastic audiences and was spoken of in the highest terms of praise by the papers and musical critics in all the principal cities. In America Mr. Blaaha has played in many of the larger cities and has been greatly admired for his faultless technic and his extensive repertoire covering the best modern and classic compositions.

Mr. Blaaha has been violinist with the orchestras of Prague, Pittsburgh, Chicago and Philadelphia; was concertmeister of the St. Joseph Symphony Orchestra and concertmeister and assistant conductor of the Ocean City Orchestra.

As a teacher Mr. Blaaha has had considerable experience, having served as instructor of violin in several institutions of note; among them the Sternberg School, Philadelphia, the Yocum School of Musical Art, Philadelphia, the Central Conservatory of Music, St. Joseph, Mo., Hollins Institute, Virginia, the Indianapolis Conservatory, and is now connected with the violin department of the Hadley School of Music

CHICAGO LYRIC QUARTET

The Chicago Lyric Quartet is being extensively booked for next summer by the Chautauqua Managers Association.

Their tour this season extended from Ohio to Iowa and was very successful. Two of their many fine notices are appended:

The manager introduced for the opening feature the Chicago Lyric Quartet, a splendid musical organization, each with individual talent well worth hearing. The personnel of the company was Eudora M. Brock, soprano; Lucy Hartman, contralto; Grant Kimbell, tenor; Collins Brock, bass, and Stanley J. Martin, pianist. The program for the afternoon concert was a pleasing combination of the lighter hymns and oratorio numbers. The "Te Deum" (Buck); "How Long Wilt Thou Forget Me" (Buck); "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" and "Hark, Hark, My Soul" gave evidence of the wisdom of selection for such a delightful sacred concert. It is difficult to single out any one of these beautiful voices for a particular mention. They each possess a charming voice, and with this that musical knowledge that cannot but be impressed upon their audience. It was a happy circumstance that the Marysville Chautauqua was opened with such acceptable talent.

In the evening program the Chicago Lyric Quartet gave a delightful prelude, appearing in Colonial costumes and presenting the old familiar songs our mothers sang and we all so delight to hear. It was plainly evident that the audience was wonderfully pleased—a compliment to the judgment of these musicians in giving the varied programs of the day.

Monday evening's entertainment by the Chicago Lyric Quartet was of special delight in that it was a miscellaneous program including selections from Grand Opera and a pleasing operetta. The program opened with a quartet from "Rigoletto," delightfully given. Miss Hartman followed with an "a" and "b" number and was enthusiastically encored, to which she responded with a clever ditty. The "Barcarolle," from "Tales of Hoffman," an ever pleasing melody, was faultlessly rendered by the quartet. Mrs. Brock sang very sweetly two selections and graciously responded to an encore. The "Spinning Quartet" from "Martha," with an explanatory talk by Mr. Brock preceding its rendition, was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience. The program closed with a most delightful little operetta, the "Sleeping Queen," by Balfe, also composer of "The Bohemian Girl." The characters as taken by the quartet were "Her Majesty," Mrs. Brock; "Donna Agnes," queen's maid of honor, represented by Miss Hartman; "Philip D'Aguilar," a young exile, by Mr. Kimbell; "His Excellency, the Regent," by Mr. Brock. It was most delightfully rendered in proper costume and made an excellent finish to a good day of entertainment. Marysville music loving people bespeak for the Chicago Lyric Quartet as an organization and individuals great success in their future work.—Union County Journal (Marysville, Ohio).

Last evening an appreciative audience assembled to hear the Chicago Lyric Quartet in their varied repertoire of celebrated songs. One is immediately struck by their versatility—and by the uniform excellence of the different selections.

The fore part of the evening was devoted to individual and quartet singing. Some of the music especially enjoyed was the duet from "Il Trovatore," the solos, "A Spanish Serenade," and "I Hear You Calling Me"; the rollicking Irish Love Song, "Oh I'm Not Mesilf, at All."

The "Spinning Quartet," from the opera "Martha," was rendered with the sympathy and whole-hearted enjoyment most delightful. The second part of the evening's entertainment was the opera, "Sleeping Queen." We are all rather prone to look askance at grand opera; we'd like it, and know we ought to like it, and some of us feel we really might like it if we could visit the Metropolitan, but—!

But do you know that Chicago Lyric Quartet made us forget all about whether we were going to like it or not; we got so interested just enjoying ourselves. Their enunciation was clear, their impersonation sincere and unaffected, their costumes effective, and their singing harmonious.

We like the Chicago Lyric Quartet.—Charles City (Iowa Daily Press. (Advertisement.)

in this city, is now located in Gary, Ind., and has become one of the best known and best liked teachers in that thriving city.

She has charge of the large chorus choir at the M. E. Church and has herself appeared in many of the important music functions in Gary during the past two years.

Her voice is contralto of wide range and power, and her repertoire is a thoroughly extended one.

Mr. Devries writes Music News from Kissingen that their stay in Europe has been extremely pleasant and details among the places to be visited the last week before sailing, Munich, Heidelberg and Baden Baden.

MARIE SIDENIUS ZENDT

Following is the well written preamble to the attractive circular being sent out by Mrs. Zendt, the Chicago soprano:

Marie Sidenius Zendt possesses a lyric soprano voice of beautiful quality, unusual range and power; combined with this is an ability along interpretative lines, notably in that of oratorio and opera, and a charming personality, which are the strongest factors in her success.

In the short time Mrs. Zendt has been before the public she has demonstrated in her many engagements that she is one of the few singers in the middle west who can adapt her work to the requirements demanded of the concert artist with the surety, not only of success but of a greater achievement, which distinguishes the artist from the ordinary singer.

In the important appearances which Mrs. Zendt has made in the last two seasons she has given sufficient guarantee of her caliber as an artist, and this has placed her in the prominent position she now occupies.

MAC BURNEY STUDIOS

Three singers, young in experience but thoroughly effective in their work, appeared on Monday evening in a long list of ladies' trios at the MacBurney Studios and two of them added greatly to the joy of the occasion also by contributing solo groups of splendid choice and interpretative values.

Miss Louise Reynolds, the first soprano of the trio, has a charming personality and a voice of unusually attractive qualities. She has poise, power in sufficient quantity and a surprising amount of finesse when it is taken into consideration that she has appeared but very little before any public.

Her solo offerings included "Snowflakes" (Mallinson), "Liebeslied" (Dvorak), "Happy Song" (Del Riego) and the difficult "Aria de Lia" from Debussy's "L'Enfant Prodigue." All of these were sung with style and purposefulness, but if a choice were made from the four it would fall on the "Happy Song," which was indeed given in a thoroughly convincing way.

Miss Minnie Lee Stone, a very young singer, has nevertheless a very large contralto voice and in its use in solo group displayed dramatic power as well as a very fine degree of finish. The Elgar "Slumber Song" was well sustained, Mallinson's "O Thank Me Not," was charming in its naive simplicity; Whelpley's "I Know a Hill," again proved to be a striking song, and the Hildach "Lenz" was given with real and convincing virtuosity.

Miss Dorothy Potter, second soprano, was added to these two to form a trio, and the balance of the voices thus established and the total of good voice and style proved to be very great. Songs of Mozart, Abt, Concone and Taubert were just old-fashioned enough to be delightful, while a touch of modernity was found in Cowen and Johnston and the climax of the whole concert was reached in the four Indian songs of Charles Wakefield Cadman, which, arranged for three voices, proved to be more delightful than ever and which were sung in a way to cover both composer and interpreters with honor.

Mr. William Lester, always happily helpful, proved himself at this concert a veritable tower of strength and to him is due especial and deep thanks for his finely balanced and colored work at the piano.

LOUISE LLEWELLYN

Miss Louise Llewellyn of the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, appeared in two recitals of folksongs of Brittany and Bohemia, last Monday afternoon and evening, at the Little Theater.

In the afternoon Miss Llewellyn gave, in costume, two groups of highly delightful readings of Brittany songs, in a beautiful soprano voice, excellent French diction, and a charm of manner wholly delightful.

ARTHUR P. THOMAS

Mr. Thomas was born in Chicago and is of German descent. In early childhood he displayed a talent for music and at the age of seven he received his first lessons on the piano from a German instructor, a graduate of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin. His music was not neglected in the pursuit of a general education and whenever opportunity offered, he played in public. At the age of fifteen he went to Berlin, where he took the entrance examination at the Royal Academy of Music and was accepted. There he studied with Professors von Petersen and Barth; also theory, harmony and composition under the guidance of leading professors of the Royal Academy. After three years he returned to Chicago where he gave a recital under the management of Mr. F. Wight Neumann. Until the summer of 1910, he devoted his time to teaching piano. He assisted in concerts and recitals, and also gave some under his own management, in all of which he was very successful. Returning to Europe in the fall of 1910, Mr. Thomas again entered the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, where he studied with Professor Barth. He sought to perfect himself more and more by unceasing, earnest work, and also by listening to the most eminent artists, such as Lamond, Sauer, D'Albert, Godowsky, Barth, etc. During this time until the summer of 1913, he also gave private lessons to a limited number of pupils. Mr. Thomas teaches the Rubinstein, Kullak and Barth methods. He is now a member of the faculty in the Lawrence Conservatory of Music at Appleton, Wis.

ARTHUR P. THOMAS

CONGREGATIONAL PRACTICE

At the parish church of High Wycombe we learn that they have congregational practices. A harmonium is placed in the chancel after evening service, and, led by the organist, the congregation run through the Psalms, hymns, and canticles for the following Sunday, on the La-la-la system. That they appear to be liked is evident by the fact that among the congregation who take the trouble to stay are an old inhabitant of ninety and the Marquis of Lincolnshire. There is nothing new in this method. The writer has in former years adopted it for special occasions, such as Carol Sunday and "Crucifixion" Sunday, when the six hymns of Stainer intended to be sung by choir and congregation were practiced. We doubt not but that this has been done in many a church. What we should like to know is, how long does the enthusiasm last? How long will it last at High Wycombe? If this time next year there is still sufficient congregational interest to keep on with the practices, the incumbent will deserve a bishopric and the organist a cathedral appointment.

We do not propose to use this matter as a medium for opening up again the perennial question as to the relation of choir and congregation. But we cannot refrain from repeating one small phase of it. Congregations have this weakness, that they almost invariably imagine that they can sing passably and correctly without practice, yea, even in four parts. Where there is an elaborate service, there is no occasion to bring up this charge against them. But where the singing is of a purely congregational type, as we imagine must be the case at High Wycombe, their attitude is simply absurd. They think that the choir needs practice in singing the identical music which they sing without. It is rarely that they can be induced to believe that if it is necessary for a choir to practice even Psalms and hymns—a choir which is supposed to be selected for its vocal capabilities—it is necessary also for them. Congregational practices at such churches are highly to be commended from all points of view. It shows that not only are the members of the choir free from ridiculous jealousy as to their imagined "rights," but that the congregation is cognizant of its own needs for that practice which makes perfect. We hope that the custom will be maintained at High Wycombe, and be adopted and maintained at other places of worship, though we have our doubts. Congregations are proverbially indolent in such matters. If they only realized that their singing would be none the less hearty for being pleasing and accurate;—Musical News (London).

admirable comprehension of the requirements of the role. Particularly excellent was her reading of the "Stabat Mater," conveying by tonal color and fine diction the subtle gradations of grief, subjective and objective, in the heart of the Mater Dolorosa. Her grasp of the score impressed as complete. Her declaration of the triumph of Christ over the power of evil was one of the splendid moments of the evening.—The Press, Evanston, Ill.

Miss Jessie Lynde Hopkins, the alto soloist, has a voice of round, full tones, with a richness and a depth that bring out the softest, sweetest tones. "He Shall Feed His Flock Like a Shepherd" sang the singer, with the rich, velvety smoothness of her voice thrilling her hearers with its warmth and feeling. It was exquisitely done, and what was true of one part was true of all she did. She took her place before the immense audience and sang her role with charming unaffectedness.—The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Ia.

From a musical, social and artistic standpoint, the recital given last evening at the Gennett Theater by Miss Jessie Lynde Hopkins, a celebrated contralto of Chicago, was one of the most charming affairs of its kind ever given in Richmond. Miss Hopkins, who, by the way, has a charming personality, is a true artist, and too much can not be said in praise of her work. Her rendition of her numbers was superb. She was in excellent voice and truly delighted her large and enthusiastic audience. —The Evening Item, Richmond, Ind.

The work of Miss Hopkins revealed a beautiful personality, a remarkable voice, and the rarest of gifts, musical intuition. No singer can interpret to the audience more than he feels, and no song interpretation can be more beautiful than one's ideal of that song. Consequently, only the finest art could produce the beautiful results which Miss Hopkins accomplished. The climax of the afternoon came with her impassioned rendering, with 'cello obligato by Mr. Ambrosius, of the great "Samson and Delilah" aria, making a glorious ending to a memorable afternoon.—The Illinois Athletic Club Magazine, Chicago, Ill. "PERSIAN GARDEN" AT OCEAN GROVE

A fine concert was given last Thursday evening in the large auditorium at Ocean Grove, N. J., to an audience of several thousand people, by the following well-known artists: Mrs. Hallett Frank, soprano; Miss Alice Mertens, contralto; John W. Nichols, tenor; Donald Chalmers, basso; Mrs. John W. Nichols, pianist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist.

One half of the program was devoted to miscellaneous numbers, which was followed by Liza Lehmann's Song Cycle, "In a Persian Garden." It was a well arranged program and every number was most enthusiastically applauded. This was the midsummer music festival and the last concert of the season.

ELBERT RIPLEY

Mr. Elbert Ripley has returned from Rockford, Ill., near which city he has been spending the summer with his family on the Rock river.

Mr. Ripley will resume his work as choir master and organist of Calvary Episcopal Church and teacher of piano on the faculty of the Chicago Conservatory, Auditorium Building.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN

Charles Wakefield Cadman, the composer, who is at present living in a secluded nook of the Rocky mountains and putting up a bungalow near Estes Park, Colorado, has just booked a number of splendid engagements for the fall and winter. He appears in Minneapolis before the Thursday Musical Club on October 9th with the remarkable Indian girl, Princess Tsianina Redfeather, in his Indian music talk and in a recital of his own compositions, together with a performance of his new trio for violin, violoncello and piano with Minneapolis Orchestra players. He has a date in Pittsburgh, his native city, where he performs his trio with local orchestral men, and presents his Indian recital with Paul Kennedy Harper at Carnegie Hall, November 14. Interspersed are appearances at Hutchinson, Kans.; Peoria, Ill.; Grand Rapids, Mich.; South Bend, Ind.; Dayton, Ohio; St. Joseph, Mo., and New York City, with other dates pending. In the metropolis he will appear before the exclusive Mozart Society at the Hotel Astor on December 6th. This will be Cadman's first New York appearance in a recital of his compositions, although he appeared with Alice Nielsen and John McCormack at Carnegie Hall last winter when he accompanied his songs sung by these artists. He will have the assistance of Ann Ivens, soprano; Corinne Welsh, contralto; Dr. Frank Lawton, tenor, and Louis Shenk, baritone, all artists under the direction of R. E. Johnston. The program will consist of his new trio played by Ida Davinoff, the Russian violinist, and a well known New York 'cellist; his Music-Talk with Shenk and his quartet cycle, "The Morning of the Year," with the above mentioned singers. The Cadman songs are increasing in popularity every week and a great sale has been realized upon "Thrush at Eve," the Indian songs, and "Dawning." Nordica sang his Japanese songs before Queen Lil at Honolulu a few days ago with great success.

GEORGE L. TENNEY

Following is some comment on the work of George Lee Tenney, Chicago tenor:

ORATORIO — FIRST PERFORMANCE OF "MESSIAH" IN GERMAN IN AMERICA

Of the men singers Mr. George L. Tenney, the tenor, should be especially mentioned. For many years I have listened to oratorio music, but not for a long time have I heard a singer who in point of voice and delivery so rose to his task as this young artist. His voice has a sympathetic quality which is remarkable. In no situation did it lack either strength or fullness of tone, and his enunciation, his whole manner of attack was amazingly precise. It is to be hoped thaat this talented young man will soon be heard again in concert.—Translated from "Germania," Milwaukee.

OPERA—"TANNHAUSER"

. . . . But if anyone deserves special mention that one is George L. Tenney. Any Denver audience knows the appeal of his voice, and could recognize at once that distinguishing pathetic quality, but everyone has not had the same opportunity to become acquainted with his dramatic ability.

His rendition of "Tannhauser" from that point of view was flawless. The keynote to his work, the one quality that made it so appealing, was delicacy.

From beginning to end his conception of his part was perfect, and met with quick response from the audience.—F. W. W. in Post, Denver.

Tenney scores a big triumph as "Tannhauser."—Denver News.

Tenney as "Tannhauser" charms music lovers with wonderful voice. . . .—Denver Republican.

Mr. Tenney made a decided hit.—Denver Post.

DAVID BISPHAM

The repertoire used by David Bispham is always of great variety, but perhaps has not been equaled in recent years by any series of songs that he has given the public until the remarkable list was heard by the people of Australia upon the tour from which Mr. Bispham has just returned.

Since leaving the middle of April, he has made about forty appearances, mostly in his own song recitals in which he was accompanied by his ever satisfactory companion, of the past three years, Mr. Harry M. Gilbert. But Mr. Bispham appeared also in various orchestral concerts in Australia and with several male chorus associations.

The custom in Australian cities for a visiting artist to give several concerts in one community before appearing before another is one which well might be emulated by artists in America.

For instance, Mr. Bisham gave four recitals in Sydney soon after his arrival, in the course of two weeks, this being followed, so great was their success, by three more extras. The same thing happened in Melbourne, where Mr. Bispham's season of four concerts was lengthened to six, with return engagements in each of these cities, consisting of six more concerts.

In this way an artist can become more readily acquainted with his audiences, and they with him, but such a course necessitates a large repertoire, and no one before the public today has at his tongue's end a greater number of songs, classical and modern, than has our own American David Bispham.

During his whole tour he was treated with the greatest distinction by both press and public, and it is altogether likely that he may return to Australia, for a few months, next summer.

There follows the list of compositions, classical, traditional and modern performed by Mr. Bispham on his Australian tour.

One hundred and twelve numbers is indeed no mean accomplishment.

CLASSICAL SONGS

Purcell — The Frost Scene ("King Arthur"); I Attempt from Love's Sickness to Fly.

Handel—Hear Me, Ye Winds and Waves ("Scipio"); O, Ruddier than the Cherry ("Acis and Galatea"); Thus Saith the Lord ("Messiah"); Where E'er You Walk ("Semele").

Haydn—The Impatient Husbandman ("The Seasons").

Mozart—Deh vieni ("Don Giovanni")

Mozart—Non piu andrai ("Marriage of Figaro"); Qui sdegno ("Magic Flute").

Secchi—When Two that Love Are Parted.

Beethoven—Adelaide; Faithful Johnnie; Creation's Hymn.

Storace—The Pretty Creature.

Schubert—The Erl King; Hark Hark the Lark; Who Is Sylvia; The Wanderer.

Schumann—Ich grolle nicht; Somebody; Naebody; When Thro' the Piazzetta; Row Gently Here; The Two Grenadiers; The Clown's Song.

Lowe—Archibald Douglas; How Deep the Slumber; Tom the Rhymer; The Wedding Song; Edward.

Mendelssohn—I'm a Roamer ("Son and Stranger"); It Is Enough ("Elijah"); Lord God of Abraham ("Elijah").

Brahms—Sapphische Ode; Four Serious Songs.

Meyerbeer—The Monk.

Cornelius—The Monotone.

Wagner — Albrecht's Curse ("Rheingold"); Beckmesser's Serenade ("Meistersinger"); Pogner's Address; Sach's Monologue; Evening Star ("Tannhauser") Wotan's Farewell ("Valkyrie").

Verdi—Infelice ("Ernani"); When I Was Page ("Falstaff").

MODERN SONGS

Gounod—Dio possente ("Faust"); Ring Out Wild Bells; Maid of Athens.

Bizet—Toreador's Song ("Carmen").

Sullivan—Woo Thou Thy Snowflakes ("Ivanhoe").

Leoncavallo—Prologue ("Pagliacci").

Hatton—To Anthea.

Frederick Clay—The Sands of Dee; She Wandered Down the Mountain Side.

Rubinstein—The Asra.

Music News

522 Kimball Hall
Chicago

IT has become quite the habit in Chicago, when any musical address is wanted, to say "Look in the classified Directory Card columns of the Music News, and you will surely find it."

The habit is growing in other localities too.

This is not without its good and sufficient reason either, for while the cost of this service is only twelve dollars a year (including subscription) the advantages gained are very material. Not only do prospective managers and pupils use this list continually to find the addresses of artists and teachers, but also, church people often find it of service in locating desired organists, directors and singers, and further—the complete list is used habitually by all sorts of advertisers who want to send announcements of new and novel productions to a representative list of musicians.

A total of one hundred and seven songs, and excerpts from oratories, operas and music dramas, old and new.

Beside these Mr. Bispham has sung the baritone solo parts with male chorus and orchestra in Hofman's "On the Norse Seas," and in the ultra-modern cantata, "Uller, the Bowman," by the English composer, Arundel Orchard, now a resident of Sydney, where he is conductor of the male chorus known as the Sydney Liedertafel.

In addition to the above, great interest was shown in Mr. Bispham's recitations to music, his offerings being "The Raven," composed by Arthur Bergh, "King Robert of Sicily," music by Rossetter Cole and "Enoch Arden," to the music of Richard Strauss. A grand total of one hundred and twelve pieces. Truly a remarkable list.

MARIE EDWARDS

Miss Marie Edwards, Chicago pianist, who is summering in Los Angeles, has been combining professional work with her vacation to good advantage.

Two weeks ago she played at the very popular Gamut Club, where all good musicians go in Los Angeles, and on Tuesday evening of this week she gave a recital at Compton.

On September 4 she will play a private musical recital in Los Angeles and on the 7th will officiate at the new organ in the Baptist Church in San Diego. She expects before her return to Chicago in October, to give a public recital in Los Angeles.

GOOD MUSIC VERSUS BAD

The following article taken from Wednesday morning's Tribune, is extremely interesting and its suggestion is certainly a fine one:

Henry E. Legler, Chicago's public librarian, yesterday, with the approval of Dr. Max Henius, vice president of the library board, announced a plan for a circulation library of music, to become as accessible to the public as the circulating book libraries now are. The purpose of the innovation is to fight the "smut song." The scheme is to become a reality as soon as funds can be provided for it.

"There is no reason to doubt the good effect that the circulation of good music by the public library would have upon Chicago," Mr. Legler said. "A child cannot acquire a taste for what he does not see or have. The smut song, with the suggestive music accompaniment, is cheap. People buy it because they cannot afford, in many instances, the better class of music. Consequently this poor and dangerous class of music finds its way into the homes. People everywhere hear it and naturally their tastes go that way.

That would not be true if children and also older persons could get good music just as they now get good books from the library.

The effect of the library has been proved, so far as reading has been concerned. Take the children's books, for instance. There was a great flood of cheap, terrible literature, so-called, at one time. Children read it because it was cheap and eeasily obtainable. This class of reading has been almost wiped out by the public library. Through its many branches and stations the library has been able to keep children supplied with the right kind of reading and the proper class of educational works. This has caused a change in the tastes of these children. They would not be satisfied now with the cheap trash. They demand good books.

So it would be, without a doubt, with music if the library could circulate the right kind of music for children to play on their pianos and other instruments.

The circulation of music easily could be handled as a department of the library. We already have had a test in the circulation of the operas we have.

SOFIA STEPHALI

Some recent press comment is as follows:

Wins Rounds of Applause.—The program by Sofia Stephali was most thoroughly enjoyed and her fine, well-rounded voice was heard to excellent advantage. "Der Prophet" was given in a wonderful manner and evoked a big round of applause. The years of study which she has had were seen in the wonderful smoothness and control of her tones, golden and full. It is not to be wondered at that audiences, both in America and on the continent have raved over her voice.—The Lewiston (Me.) Daily Sun Commercial, May 27, 1913.

A Glorious Voice.—Sofia Stephali has a big nature as well as a big voice and this radiated from her warmth and friendliness and vitality the moment she appeared. She is a singer of the glorious voice and irreproachable art. Her voice, one of power and vibrancy, is at times beautifully soft and caressing, with a wealth of color.—Lewiston (Me.) Saturday Journal, May 31, 1913.

A Voice of Rare Quality.—Stephali's voice is of rare quality, rich in tone, very expressive and of unusual volume.—The Daily News, Cumberland, Md., Dec. 7, 1913.

Remembered by Voice.—Stephali's voice is a mezzo with luscious alto tones and clear high ones. Those who met her personally found her interesting and enjoyable. She will be remembered by her beautiful voice.—Worcester (Mass.) Daily Telegram, April 24, 1913. (Advertisement.)

ANOTHER SON BORN TO MME. GERVILLE REACHE

Another tiny traveler will accompany the famous contralto, Madame Gerville Reache, next winter on her concert tour. For Dr. Rambaud is now the proud father of two boys, Paul and George, George having been born at 1 a. m. August 25. Mme. Gerville Reache always took little Paul along on her transcontinental flights. She considers nervousness as the worst thing that could befall a singer, and seeing her baby asleep before she leaves the hotel for the concert room, is to her, the strongest and healthiest inspiration she could wish for. Furthermore, as she intends to nurse little George as she did Paul, George will soon rival Paul's record for youthful travel.

Dellers.—Mr. Walter Dellers, who has spent his summer in Holland, South Germany and the Tyrol, has sent cards to Chicago announcing his return and the reopening of his studios in Chicago and River Forest on September 15. During the summer Mr. Dellers has written "In Hungarian Style," which has been published by Schirmer and "Barcarolle Venetienne" and "Serenade Espagnole," which are being sent out by Fischer.

Kellerman.—Marcus Kellerman, who has been engaged by Oscar Hammerstein as one of his principal baritones, will begin a short concert tour at Hamilton, Ont., October the 9th. A series of six or eight concerts in southern Canada will follow, giving Mr. Kellerman just enough time to return to New York before the opening of the opera season.

Music in America

CARBONDALE, ILL.

Carbondale people are glad to learn of the organization of a musical club for the purpose of bringing first class artists here in recital. This club is the outcome of the musical appreciation class, which was organized last winter.

It has been hoped and expected that the State Normal University here, a flourishing and elegantly equipped institution, would introduce a winter course by musical artists; but as they have been so slow in taking up this branch of community education, it is left to a few music loving and progressive citizens to take the initiative.

The circle of teachers and musicians are happy to know that Carbondale is at last "on the map" musically.

CHAUTAUQUA NEWS

Carl Busch's dramatic choral composition, "King Olaf," with the libretto arranged from the text of Longfellow's "Songs of Olaf," given Monday, August 11, was one of the finest musical productions of the 1913 season. This performance and the repetition of "Il Trovatore" on August 15, made the week one long to be remembered by music lovers.

Wednesday afternoon the Junior Choir delightfully rendered George Rathbone's pleasing cantata "Vogelmeid, the Minnesinger." The singing of the cantata was artistic and showed splendid training on the part of Mr. Hallam, musical director.

The children also sang three beautiful choruses in charming style.

Mr. Hutcheson played two numbers with exquisite interpretation and faultless technic.

Mr. Sarto's vibrant baritone was unusually good in the "Banjo Song" and "Rolling Down to Rio." His rich, pure tones and perfect diction are always a pleasure to the audience.

Mr. Schumann sang two solos delightfully, "Bowl of Roses," by Clark, and "Carrissima," by Penn.

The duet, "Nearest and Dearest," sung by Mrs. Cora Barker Janney and Miss Myrtle Thornberg was one of the most attractive numbers of the afternoon.

The accompaniments for the afternoon were artistically rendered by Mr. L. B. Dana.

The annual operatic concert took place Monday evening, August 18, before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The orchestra contributed two beautiful selections: "The Firefly," by Friml, and the "Barcarole," from "Tales of Hoffmann." Mrs. Janney's rich contralto was very expressive in an aria from "Mitrane." Mr. Lehmann gave a brilliant rendition of "Celeste Aida."

Miss Thornburg sang charmingly Puccini's beautiful aria from "Madame Butterfly," a selection well suited to her lyric soprano.

Mr. Andreas Sarto's sympathetic baritone showed to great advantage in his highly artistic and dramatic rendition of the Prologue to "Pagliacci."

An especially attractive number was the quartet arrangement from the "Lucia Sextet," sung by the soloists for August.

Mr. Morcosson's rendition of "Gypsy Dances," by Sarasate, was extremely pleasing and called forth tremendous applause.

A CHAUTAUQUAN.

HANOVER, PA.

How fitting and appropriate it was to invite a former organist to play the new organ in Emmanuel Reformed Church. And then, how courteous it was in J. Frank Frysinger to accept the invitation. But above all, with what earnestness the brilliant young organist and composer strove to weave the magic spell of music about the music-lovers of his native town. The stillness which reigned throughout the recital was mute testimony that he had succeeded, and only the sancity of the place prevented an outburst of applause after each number.

"A prophet is not without honor save in his own country" is too often found to be true. But we daresay that there was no one in the large audience assembled to hear the former "Hanover boy" who was not proud of his attainment thus far, and unitedly hope for further achievement in his chosen profession.

Mr. Frysinger surely plays with a master hand and his work gives evidence of thorough study and artistic interpretation of the works of the masters.

Great interest was centered in a group of numbers, recently composed by Mr. Frysinger, one of them "Traumlied," being played by him in a recital for the first time. As a composer Mr. Frysinger is original, without striving for the bizarre effects of the extremely modern school. The "Processional March" is a stately composition,

At the close of the recital an informal reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Frysinger, their many friends and acquaintances remaining to extend congratulations.

There were a number of people present from York, Spring Grove, Littlestown, New Oxford, Jefferson, and other nearby places.

Mr. Frysinger is now head of the organ department of the University School of Music, at Lincoln, Neb., and is spending the summer in York and Hanover.

The program was as follows:

Mendelssohn—Sonata No. 6. Choral ("Our Father Who Art in Heaven"). Four variations. Fuga. Andante (Finale).
Beethoven—Menuet in G.
Schubert—"By the Sea."
Bach—Prelude and Fugue in A Minor.
Wolstenholme—Allegretto in E flat.
Hoyte—Scherzo in B flat.
Cadman—"From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water."
J. Frank Frysinger—Traumlied (First Time); Processional March (new); Cantilene (new); Laudate Dominum (new); Meditation.—Record Herald (Hanover).

LOS ANGELES

So little, in a public way, has been in evidence that my weekly letter has been abandoned to semi-monthly until the season assumes activity. The musical forces have not, however, been idle.

Peculiar conditions confront managers the present year. The division of interest may entail enormous risks to present everything at its best promise and secure a proper balance for each aspiring to impresarial honors.

An unusually fine array of talent is presented for our music-loving people by our experienced and reliable local impresario of many years, Mr. L. E. Behymer. So much of interest and quality in opera, concert, recitals, spectacular and orchestra, keep up an active motion and require a clever fortune besides. The Symphony Orchestra will have Mr. Frederic H. Toye as business director and Mr. Adolph Tandler as musical director.

Miss Cora Foy will continue in business matters with the Woman's Orchestra, and the latest information is that Mr. Henry Schoenfeld has been given the honors of the baton in this, the oldest orchestra, composed entirely of women, in America, now opening its twenty-fourth season.

The People's Orchestra with Edward Lebegott, conductor, and with Mr. Charles F. Edson the manager, will give forty or more concerts. Sunday afternoon performances and some occasional evening performances of special programs, with the People's Chorus, a part of the State Music Teachers' Association's interest in the educational work, by giving good music at popular prices, which the many can pay.

The year will test both management and people, to support so great a supply of attractions that merit encouragement for local growth of talent and create an appreciation for the greatest works in music and the greatest interpreters in the varied lines of demonstrative art. Preparations are under way to make the 1915 the climactic period, when the $10,000 national opera (prize composition) is in anticipation in conjunction with the biennial assembly of

COLORATURA SOPRANO

Mrs. Stern has naturally a most beautiful voice as well as an admirable stage presence, and these she has greatly enhanced by a most comprehensive course of study.

Her repertoire is a very large one and she can be engaged for oratorio, concert or recital engagements. She makes a specialty of society engagements.

SAMPLE PROGRAM

Verborgenheit, Elfenlied, Widmung — Hugo Wolf
Der Nussbaum — Schumann
Obstination — Fontenailles
Jeunes Fillets, Maman dites Moi — Weckerlin
Les Filles de Cadiz — Delibes
Chanson Provencale — Del Acqua
I Hear You Calling Me — Marshall
Day Is Gone — Margaret Lang
Spring — Henschel
Recompense — Hammond
Je suis Titania (Polonaise) (Mignon) — Thomas

A CHICAGO CRITIC'S OPINION

"In a concert recently given at the Fine Arts Theater in Chicago, Mrs. Stern was heard in the glittering 'Polonaise' from the opera of 'Mignon' and at once proved her right to be classed with the most effective of coloratura singers.

"Her intonation was clarity itself and her shading was remarkably well controlled—the power ranging from a splendid forte to the most refined of pianissimos at will.

"The tricky rhythms of this most difficult number were perfectly maintained and the brilliant color was conserved to the full—staccati, chromatic scale and difficult skips were all manipulated with the greatest of ease and at the conclusion of the number Mrs. Stern was recalled several times and given the warmest possible assurance that she had pleased her audience to the utmost."

The German Saengerfest, which will also meet here in the summer of 1915, is anticipating the presence of Herr Siegfried Wagner, who will conduct one or more of his father's works on that occasion.

Verdi's "Requiem Mass" is in rehearsal for an early presentation in a centennial festival to the great and popular author of opera. The Municipal Art Commission designs to erect a tablet or bust to his memory, in some one of our city parks.

Mr. Delmor Cheney gave lately several very interesting song recital programs with splendid appreciation.

The coming of Sibyl Sammis and her talented husband, Mr. MacDermid, in his own compositions and songs, is an anticipated pleasure. So, also, our American baritone, Mr. Charles W. Clarke, booked for January 10.

Geraldine Farrar is announced to open the Behymer Philharmonic course, October 9.

Three opera companies will present a course this season.

Mr. Carl Faelten

An exceedingly enjoyable event took place last Tuesday evening at the Gamut Club Auditorium. The club and the New England Conservatory Association gave a musical reception to the celebrated teacher, educator, musician and pianist, Mr. Carl Faelten of Boston, Mass. He was greeted by a host of graduates of the Eastern Music School and a large assembly of friends who listened to a piano recital of some more than ordinary excellence, which was rendered in a highly artistic and brilliant manner. His sense of proportion, poise, symmetry and detail, was evidenced. He took the liberty to give some verbal expression of some of the numbers. The good impression was in keeping with his well known reputation. The following is the program, all played equally well, demonstrating that years have not fallen ruthlessly upon mind or body:

Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue.....Bach
Novelette Op. 21, No. 2.....Schumann
Capriccio Op. 76, No. 2.....Brahms
Scherzo Op. 4.....Brahms
Sonata Op. 111
Maestro-Allegro
Arietto } .....Beethoven
Preludio Op. 23, No. 4
Barcarolle Op. 45 } .....Rubinstein
Etude de Concert Op. 23, No. 2
Allegro de Concert Op. 4.....Chopin

The monthly meeting of the Music Teachers' Association had much of interest in the reports of the state meeting and steps taken and suggested for a more systematic education, to harmonize the efforts in schools, public and private and individual lessons, to secure credit in a course of training, all working toward a purpose and conformity to musical standards.

The extreme heat has not interfered altogether with musical activities here. Indeed in the past few weeks we have had several rare treats. Ferullo's band has just ended a two weeks engagement at Lakeside Park. Joplin folk and many from surrounding towns have filled the open air theater to overflowing and all have been pleased with the splendid programs which were offered them each afternoon and evening by the band and soloists.

Fine programs were also given during the week of Chautauqua. The most artistic, perhaps were those given by Ralph Brokaw, violinist, assisted and accompanied by Mrs. Brokaw. The numbers of his afternoon program included "Legende," by Wieniawski; "Ave Maria" of Schubert; Beethoven's "Minuet" in G, Schumann's "Traumerei," and those of the evening, two Mazurkas by Wieniawski, "Canzonetta," by d'Ambrosia, the Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and a "Polish Dance," by Earl Drake, all very appropriate for a summer day's entertainment. Mr. Brokaw's interpretations are beautiful and his numbers were made more interesting by short explanations given before each one. He draws a splendid tone and pleased the audience so much that he was compelled to give several encore numbers. In addition to her sympathetic accompaniments, Mrs. Brokaw gave several numbers, among which was Chaminade's "Autumn." Mr. Brokaw is connected with the Power-Meyer Conservatory in Wichita, Kan., and certainly deserves the good reputation he has won.

Last Wednesday night we were very fortunate in hearing a piano recital by Paul Wells, who has just returned from study abroad. He was formerly a pupil of W. S. Calhoun of Joplin, later graduating from Peabody Conservatory, and the past two years he has spent in Berlin and Vienna, where he worked with Lhevinne and Godowsky.

The west wing of the roof garden on the Connor Hotel was transformed into an English garden for the concert and was indeed an ideal place with its cool breezes and sweet scented flowers. Mr. Wells' opening number, Schumann's Sonata in G minor, was beautifully played, especially the lovely Andantino, which showed true musical feeling. A group of Chopin numbers the Etude in F minor, Etude C minor Nocturne, B major, Waltz G flat and Ballade in F minor, were played with delicacy and splendid rhythm and were thoroughly enjoyed. His technic is finely developed and his scale passage wonderfully clear. The last group opened with a charming little waltz by the artist himself, followed by "Turkish March," Beethoven-Rubinstein, Sonnet (after the 123d Sonnet of Petrarch), by Liszt; also Etude de Concert, F minor, and Hungarian Rhapsody (Rakoczy March) by Liszt. The Sonnet was played in beautiful dreamy style, and one can perhaps appreciate it better if he knows the translation:

I saw here below a radiant angel
With whose beauty naught on earth could compare;
So that changing joy and sorrow stole o'er me—
I thought thereon, and knew it to be a Dream of Life,
And through my tears I saw those two lights of joy and sorrow.
So bright they were that the sun grew pale with envy;
And through my sighing I heard such words
That caused the rivers to hang motionless against the rocks.
Love, honor, valor, longing and deepest sorrow
Spoke so softly,
That the zephyrs changed them into music.
Breathlessly the heavens listened to the tones,
And in silent wonder not a leaf stirred on the branches
As the sweet sound was wafted through the air.

EVOLUTION OF THE CHIN

(Contributed Editorial.)

In Current Opinion of July, 1913, the question as to the use of the human chin was discussed, and "after much pondering on the subject, the renowned man of science, Sir Ray Lankester, states that he is unable to discover any mechanical or physiological purpose it subserves." The fact that only modern races of mankind have chins while primitive man did not possess this bony prominence proves it a development. To quote further, "Since the chin subserves no purpose of utility it is a mystery of evolution. It performs no functions. Why did it evolve? Why has it persisted?" "A chin inspires fear and respect for its possessor." "A chin seems to inspire admiration." "We know little more about it than the bare fact of its existence." Some anthropologists maintain that it has some necessary connection with the power of speech; but Sir Ray fails to find what that connection may be," and decides that "it is a product of sexual selection alone."

The anthropologists are right; it has a very vital connection with the power of speech since the fan shaped body of tongue muscle has its root in the chin. Look at a representation of the tongue and there will be no doubt as to the importance of the chin. There is no more voluntary active muscle in the human body than the tongue, especially since man has learned to speak. This active muscle needs a secure foundation, so a chin has evolved out of the growing necessities of activity. It persists because the power of speech is growing greater every day. It inspires fear, respect and admiration because it intuitively reveals a power within. Since only those who speak have chins it proves without a doubt that it is a necessary factor for tongue activity in speech.

Eloquent speech demands the finest tongue activity possible.

Sir Ray Lankester may have been misled because of the erroneous teaching that leads us to believe that the tongue root is in the throat.

The tongue is the chief tool of the intellect, consequently it is the chief factor in the change that has been wrought between prehistoric man and the intelligent man of today.

KATHERINE SCHUSTER.

EXPLOIT HOME COMPOSERS

A letter from London published in one of the American weekly music papers details the service of the London promenade concerts to the British composer and advocates a branching out of the service, already very effective, in so far as the better known writers is concerned, to include also the lesser known composers.

Every concert series in America should emulate the London promenade concerts in this respect. Much of American music has been presented to our best concert going public the past few years, but during the coming year the amount should be multiplied many times.

Facts You Should Know

Before you make your choice is the time to find out all there is to be learned about the instrument that is to furnish the music for your home or studio for years to come.

Find out for yourself not only how pianos are built but how they are sold.

Learn the facts regarding the STARR piano—how it is made in one of the largest and best equipped factories in the world and how coupled with every known factory facility, that counts for efficiency and economy, there is employed the greatest creative ability and the most competent workmanship.

Everything that has been learned in a half century of piano building is utilized in the building of the STARR piano of today to make it as perfect a piano as human ingenuity can devise.

The STARR LINE of PLAYER PIANOS and PIANOS is sold absolutely at ONE PRICE—this means that every purchaser pays the lowest price for which the instrument he buys can be sold.

Investigate before you buy. Call or write for information regarding prices, terms, etc.

MUSIC NEWS PLANS

In bringing greetings at the opening of the new music season, Music News also adds Congratulations to the whole profession on the brilliant outlook and the very certain appearance that there will be much public interest in the art throughout the season.

Not only are there indications a-plenty that the season will open early, but also the extent and the number of projected enterprises seem to augur a long continuance of interest.

Music News has found but little time for vacation during the past three months, and in fact, has passed through one of the busiest seasons it has yet known, while its growth has been continuous and steady throughout the year.

During the coming season we shall try, even more faithfully than heretofore to meet all the requirements of an absolutely up-to-date music journal, and it is with pleasure that we make a number of important announcements today.

In Chicago the interests of the musicians will be better taken care of than ever before, the bulk of the reviews being done by the Editor and Mr. Albert Cotsworth. The famous "Elderly Person" articles, contributed by a Chicagoan and read everywhere, will also be continued weekly.

In view of the fact that Music News today reaches a greater number of organists and choir singers than does any other music journal, we shall not only continue to pay much attention to church music in Chicago, but have also secured two contributors who will deal with this subject, as well as with others, in Boston and New York.

The first of these writers is S. Harrison Lovewell, who has taken up his residence in Boston, and the other is J. S. Van Cleve, the very well known writer, who now lives in New York. Church programs and also questions or comment may be directed to Mr. Lovewell, care the Boston Music Company, Boston, or Mr. Van Cleve, at the Musician's Club, New York.

The fine work of May Mansfield in Paris will be continued, as also that of Mrs. Fridenberg in New York and Miss Elston in Pittsburgh, as well as many other successful writers in other cities, while in Chicago still another special writer will be provided in the person of William ApMadoc, who will once a month contribute an article on Public School Music. In order that this may be far reaching in its value Music News invites comment and question. This may be sent to Mr. ApMadoc, care of Music News. An occasional article will also be written by Mr. ApMadoc on "Coming Eisteddfods," a subject of vital interest in the Choral Society World.

Music News is just completing its Fifth Year of life, and, in view of the remarkable growth of the past year we propose to celebrate our anniversary by putting out a Special Issue of very great importance.

The date of this issue will be October Tenth, and we shall bend every effort to make it a thoroughly worthy one.

AMERICA FIRST

The time has come when a musical Declaration of Independence should be issued and when we should cease, as a nation, to worship the foreign musician simply because he is such, and when we should begin to appreciate and to endorse our own products in the musical line.

For many years it was considered necessary to acquire the European finish to a musical education, and even after the necessity of this has long since vanished we still keep up the practice of sending our best pupils abroad not because of any real gain to their musical education but simply because as a nation we have not yet outgrown the idea that such precedure is necessary and the "foreign label" on an American is still very highly honored in many quarters.

In schools and colleges throughout the land where Americanism is taught and preached in every other department, it is still the custom to insist upon "foreign study" in the case of the instructors in the music department.

But, worse than this, is the fact that we worship the foreign concert artists and pay them fancy prices for their work while at the same time we are failing to recognize the American product in the same line.

Every year young Americans are graduated in every department of the musical art. Thousands of them go abroad to get the supposedly proper label; thousands of them give introductory recitals after spending years in preparation, and the number of them who ever get anywhere at all on our concert stage is appallingly small, while at the same time we encourage a continual importation of foreign artists, good, bad and indifferent, and we reimburse them royally for the effort they make to visit us. It happens again and again that a foreign artist in America makes more in a season than the president of the United States is paid in a year, and meantime we have young American artists in every city who cannot get any pay engagements whatsoever.

It is time for a national change of attitude in the whole matter.

Beginning with our opera companies: Americans should be given precedence in every possible case. They should not be engaged patronizingly to fill such minor positions as the foreigners do not care to accept. They should be considered first, and wherever they are able to do the same work as a foreigner they should be chosen in his place and should receive the same pay he has enjoyed.

Our orchestras should engage the young artists in the various cities in which they operate, and other young Americans also, to appear as soloists; not in the "popular" concerts alone or on the "off nights," but they should be tried out under the very best of circumstances, and if able to do the work now so largely usurped by the foreigners it should be given to them in preference to the outsiders.

True, the public still wants the foreigners, but that is only because no one else

Music in Chicago

LAST OF THE SUMMER NIGHT CONCERTS

The last of the summer night concerts at the Warren Avenue Church was fortunate in the fact of a cool night, and therefore the attendance was a fairly good one. The program evoked much enthusiasm and was indeed given with much distinction throughout.

Mr. Frank Parker, a baritone of great finish and with a voice which is absolutely satisfying throughout its range, opened the program with "After the Night the Dawn" (Thomas), "The Song of the Blackbird" (Quilter), and "Until" by Coleridge-Taylor in each of these displaying tonal quality which was thoroughly pleasing and an interpretative ability which was convincing. The Quilter song is piquant and gay and "Until" is a decidedly impassioned composition, the two together making excellent contrast to each other and providing opportunity for many musical lights and shades, which was fully taken advantage of by Mr. Parker.

For his second group "The Heart's Country," "When the Night Comes," and "The Cock Shall Crow," by John A. Carpenter, again proved that writer to be a credit to Chicago and one whose prestige is bound to be a rapidly growing one wherever his works are introduced.

Mr. Parker has made a special study of the vocal values and the interpretative possibilities of these songs and he gives them in a thoroughly authentic as well as a profoundly musical way. "May the Maiden" added on encore demand proved to be another gem from the Carpenter pen and it provided Mr. Parker one of the most grateful moments of the evening.

Mr. Parker was greeted with enthusiasm and this, his farewell appearance in Chicago for the present, proved to be a thoroughly successful one and provided a most graceful occasion by which he will be especially remembered by all those who heard him.

After several years in Chicago singing in various churches and teaching at the American Conservatory, Mr. Parker goes to take charge of the vocal department at Columbia University in Missouri, and with him go the good wishes of a long list of Chicago friends.

Miss Madeline Gallagher, a very pleasing soprano, was the second singer of the program and at once stepped into very great favor with the audience.

She has splendid poise and fine style and —a fact which was found to be very agreeable on last Thursday evening—she sings absolutely without notes or notebook, and thus she adds a certainty which is surely lacking where the singer must continually follow his words.

Miss Gallagher has a voice of much sweetness and power and her method is such a natural and easy one that she is able to manipulate all her forces with the utmost of ease and a correspondingly musical effect. Her sense of text values is also a great one and she was able, on Thursday, to differentiate her various songs very satisfactorily.

Cowen's "A Birthday" was sung with great aplomb; Schneider's "Unmindful of the Roses" proved again to be sentimentally beautiful, and the MacFadyen "Spring Singing" created a genuine sensation. It was sung with remarkable freedom and effect.

Newton's "Love's Echo," Cole's "A Kiss and a Tear," and Mrs. Beach's "Ah Love, but a Day" made an excellently contrasted second group, all of the numbers being sung with much intelligence; and "Will o' the Wisp," by Spross, formed a splendid encore selection and was tossed off by Miss Gallagher with abandon and much of musical purity.

The third singer was Mr. Dwight Edrus Cook, a tenor with splendid appearance and a ringing voice.

His range is extended and his scale is smooth, while he is able to cap a climax with top notes which are very telling.

Carissimi's "Vittoria, Vittoria," a bravoura song of much charm, was sung with great assurance and with a working out of its musical values which was very distinguished.

"I Love Thee" (Foerster) proved to be an impassioned number, well considered; "For Music" (Franz) was given a smoothly legato reading; "Invictus," by Huhn, was properly bravoura, and "Let Her Believe," a short tenor aria from "The Girl of the Golden West" (Puccini) was as delightful as it was unusual.

Mr. Cook sings with much authority and

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

By SIDNEY SILBER

Stagnation in pianoforte study is synonymous with retrogression.

The playing of many pianists frequently reminds me of Bellamy—"Looking Backward."

A dimple in a smiling young lady's face is often worth more—in point of charm—than hours of so-called "legitimate" piano playing.

"Classical" piano playing is most frequently only stiff and dry piano playing.

He who can play the piano—does; he who can not, usually teaches a method.

The value of a diploma stands in direct ratio to the standards of the institution which confers it—not necessarily upon the SIZE of the institution.

Every nation seems pre-destined to outshine its fellow nations in some particular respects. Thus far, Germany has successfully championed the cause of science and musical composition. "It is up" to the other nations to wrest this supremacy from her—if they can.

Methods do not make artists. METHOD may make a piano-player, but not a pianist.

A piano is more than a beautiful piece of furniture or a machine. It is primarily a work of art—provided it is first class.

It is unfair to throw the entire responsibility of piano playing upon the fingers. Fingers do not necessarily make good pianists, although all good pianists appreciate these "invaluable tools."

Never remain with a teacher—no matter how great he (or she) may be, if—after conscientious trial, you feel that you are stagnating.

It is always the most fortunate coincidence when the right student procures the right teacher.

In the last analysis there are neither good nor bad teachers—there are only good or bad students. A good student can learn even from an incompetent teacher, namely, how NOT to do things. A poor student can not learn anything from a competent teacher.

Your audiences, unless composed entirely of "indulgent" friends, never take anything for granted. They must "be shown."

is able to show many subtle shades of meaning in the texts he has to interpret, while always he maintains also correct vocal values. His encore number was "Requiem," by Homer, and proved to be one of his very best efforts.

The only instrumental soloist of the program was Miss Mabel Woodworth, violinist, already a great favorite at these concerts. Her presentation of the last two movements of the Mendelssohn "Concerto" was masterly and her reception by the audience was correspondingly cordial.

There was breadth of tone and suavity of musical flow in the slow movement, while the bravoura of the last was conserved most faithfully—speed, rhythm and shading all being remarkably well maintained.

For her second appearance she played the Tschaikowsky "Canzonetta" with an appealing tonal quality and a simplicity of phrase which was refreshing, while the Sarasate "Introduction-Tarentelle" proved to be a piece of vivid virtuosity in which every element which goes for brilliancy of effect was managed in the most telling way.

For encore Miss Woodworth played with delicious lilt a languorous waltz movement by Kreisler.

All of the accompaniments were played by Mr. Phelps Cowan, who again proved himself a master in such situation and not only thoroughly conversant with pianistic possibilities but also a player who studies the idiosyncrasies of the singer with whom he is associated.

Both Mr. Cowan and Mr. Ralph Gerber, the alternate accompanist of the series, deserve unlimited praise for the way in which their work was done.

Throughout the series of eight concerts a medium-sized grand piano of Mason & Hamlin make remained on the platform at the church, and this piano proved itself a delight at each one of the concerts. Its tone was exquisitely sympathetic and its touch was perfectly balanced. Not only did each solo pianist revel in its beauty, but the accompanists also found it a splendid help.

A Card to Music Teachers

Now at the opening of the musical season, we would like to call the attention of teachers to our large stock of graded teaching music. We would be pleased to send packages in the various grades required "on selection." Write to us and see how promptly your orders will be filled. Send for our new catalogue and order blank. Orders filled the same day as received.

VACATION ECHOES

Music News presents today a group of vacation pictures showing our friends in widely separated localities.

In the center of the group is Mabel Riegelman, who is, as everybody is glad to know, again to be one of the sopranos of the Chicago Grand Opera Company. The picture shows Miss Riegelman "resting after canoeing on Lake Merrett, Cal." In the upper row, to the left is seen Edgar Stillman Kelley and Henry F. Gilbert on the porch of the "Lower House" of the MacDowell Association at Peterborough, N. H., where they were prominent (as told in today's Music News) in the recent festival.

In the middle is Grant Kimbell, who has just returned to Chicago from a Chautauqua trip and who, according to the Tribune of Marysville, Ohio, "is no mollycoddle—he enjoyed sleeping in the big tent at the Chautauqua Grounds on Monday and Tuesday nights and among other things he chaperoned a party of thirty boys who went swimming in Mill Creek. Kimbell enjoyed it as much as the boys." Charles Wakefield Cadman, summering in Colorado, who is shown at the right, says in a letter to the editor of Music News, "I say nothing and saw wood, or rather I compose nothing and saw wood. I have a family of educated chipmunks and have namedone of them for you." In the second row, to the left is seen Christine Miller, who is spending the summer abroad, and who writes enthusiastically of the beauties of Switzerland; the picture was taken on the "Mer de Glace" at Chamounix and shows Miss Miller, with a companion, crossing the glacier. To the right of this row is seen the choir boys of St. James, with their director, John W. Norton, in camp at Dixon, Ill. In the third row, to the left, is a glimpse of the North End Hotel on the Board Walk at Ocean Grove. Here was held, in August the most successful social function ever known by the N. A. O. To the right is seen the Villard Hall of U. of O. at Eugene, Ore., where Arthur Frazier, Chicago pianist, was heard in recital this week. In the lower row, to the left is shown Milton D. Griffith of South Bend, Ind., and Charles Wakefield Cadman on the rocks near Estes Park, Colo., Mr. Cadman's summer home. In the center is a picture of Kubelik playing chess in the grounds of his castle, and to the right we may see Carl Kinsey and his small son in the box car in which they accompanied their saddler, "Blue Grass Belle" to Delavan Lake, Wis., where they spent the summer.

The Elderly Person

The laughter and repartee and the music of the evening were over. The people from the Camp were threading their homeward steps through the path in the woods, and their flashlights glimmered amid the tree trunks like fireflies. The Elderly Person saw these sparkling, as he stole out from the household and made his way for the necessary good night to his Indian, as he loved to call Lorado Taft's mighty statue of "Black-Hawk," overlooking the Rock River at Eagles' Nest.

There were stars in the sky to give a thousand tiny swinging lamps of light and make the path plain. One red fellow fairly blazoned the course and made a splotch of wavering color in the river flowing noiselessly below the bluff. That nebula of unattached substance which is spoken of as the "Milky Way" followed its unsteady track across the heavens. And the August meteors were playing at fireworks. The rockets started irresponsibly anywhere and trailed a curve of shining gold for a brief instant, and then landed in the everywhere. Down the gentle incline through the glade the feet went surely, with "Mother's Tree" as the guard at the outpost to give the password to, and so have permission to go outside the lines after taps. The stately trunk and far-reaching arms were clearly defined in the half-light. The leaves rustled soothingly and assuringly. It was an old, old story to the tree—this sentinel and guardian of the forest that had seen the nights come and go for perhaps two hundred years. Just beyond, the wide path became a narrowed one, winding through a thicket wherein the small poplar trees were whispering as do little children when snuggled in bed, and wondering at the noise of strange feet stumbling along at unseemly hours. Then came the crest of the hill, and the wide sweep of the firmament, and the phosphorescent shoots of lights on the river, the black masses of growth on the islands made darker and heavier by contrast. And all silent with the repose of the night. The footsteps lagged as the eyes tried inadequately to compass the surpassing glory of the moment. Up and down and far and wide was immensity, inspiring, uplifting, compelling expanse. Then there came imperceptibly the consciousness of a brooding influence—and the Indian was there. Silently, as was the way of his progenitors, he had stolen into the scene and with folded arms and lofty patience, waited. Although built of cement and gravel, and fashioned with human hands, he took his place as a spirit, an atmosphere, a disintegrated substance,—what you will, that defines a dominant force, commanding and extending over every surrounding element.

Somehow the figure quietly but authoritatively takes possession of the spot. It never obtrudes—the rather a sense of intrusion comes over one who treads with hesitation into its presence. Its bigness of proportion has nothing to do with this influence. A short distance away from the place the base does not appear, because of a thick growth of shrubs near at hand. So marvelously is the form modeled that it easily becomes an accepted entity, a something there just as are the trees. That left moccasin-covered foot has made the final movement of a stately stride which places the figure in the foreground, and it braces the frame underneath the draped blanket which covers but does not conceal the sinewy strength. One knows that the other foot is planted squarely and unequivocally; that the thighs are firm and well rounded; that the limbs are shapely and are knotted with wiry muscles, which play in and out under the smooth swarthy skin; that the loins are wide, deep reservoirs of latent power; that the torso is lithe and supple and knitted together with slender steel-like tendons; that the arms are long and symmetrical and have great freedom of sweep; that the biceps stand up like twisted cordage and curve with a heavy flexibility and have the grip of determination in their folded ease; that the hands are broad, but with powerful fingers which never twitch nervously, always tense and vigorous with suppressed strength. There has been a leisurely gathering assurance in the pose, as the arms have lifted up the weave of the blanket and wound it about the form into a kingly garment, and then crossed themselves in masterful potency as the big shoulders went back and the head was raised fearlessly. In shaping the blanket about the neck, the layers have thickened into creases until they fully cover the back of the neck, and thus push the two thick braids of hair over the shoulders, one at either side of the face, framing it in part. The coils slip easily down the swart neck and hide themselves in the garment's looseness. The part in the crown of hair is apparently a trifle to one side, and the semi-roach falls just a little over the low forehead, for the hair grows well forward and intrudes upon the forehead. The other side sweeps away clean and even. The brow does not hang over the eyes greatly, and the eyes themselves do not impress as being deep set. But they are piercing, far-seeing, unflinching, searching and eagle-like in their breadth of vision. And they follow everywhere. They look out untiringly across the smiling bottom lands towards the southeast, until it is found that they are just as penetrating toward the northwest. And there is a feeling of their alertness even when the rear of the figure is sought. As if, were it required, the head would swing round and give reproof or command, with full knowledge of its need or value. The nose has that strange curve in it recalling a bird's beak. There is none of the keenness of the thoroughbred in its nostrils; they do not quiver with eagerness and emotional tensity, but inhale the air with deep suspiration and steady calmness. The mouth is tightly compressed,—no protruding lower lip of the student is there. But leashed unflinchingly with severity, it molds the lines and controls the firm chin which yet has a tiny cleft in it, underneath. And supporting the dominant head is the keynote of all the power—the broad, sturdy neck, arched and vibrant with conscious will and uncontrollable resolution. It slopes to the hidden strength of the shoulders under the blanket with wondrous grace. It is unabased. It is full and rounded. There are no creases of skin, no suggestion of luxurious living and a double chin. It is not an old man's shriveled neck. It has billows of uncompromising elasticity. It would bend and twist and writhe but never break. It glares with untamed sureness of its inheritance of supremacy and unyielding stubbornness. It is the channel through which the mentality controls the body and sends behests that are to be obeyed. There are no drawn tendons or cords to indicate strain. And notable is the absence of the string of amulets or claws about this neck. In fact there are none of the gewgaws included in the usual portrayal of the Indian. Feathers in that hair would be incongruous. This majestic creation disdains any such frippery and asks to be regarded for its inherent worth alone.

And yet withal there is not missing ever, the presence of a serene protecting beneficence. It throws back its head and shoulders reliantly because it is present as a sponsor or mentor—as one who must be strong to guide, but also gentle to lead; as one who must seek for his instruction from a higher source, and, acknowledging that higher authority, use the power so bestowed with reverent patience for those who are to be directed. It needs no amulet to forefend or suggest. The inward monitor is the fountain of supply. And the inevitable sadness which goes with responsibility is not left out. Strength and the simplicity which it engenders speak in every outline. A strength that would never admit failure or lack courage. As Mr. Heckman tersely says: "It could be conquered, but never subdued."

All this and more beats in upon the mind and heart in the presence of this superb visualization of an artist-poet's vision. What is seen does not so much suggest art as personality. As if the sculptor but reproduced something that the surroundings themselves created, and he had been chosen as the revealing means, because of the fineness of his mental and spiritual grain. And because of this film of mysterious influence, the figure has a species of hypnotism. The Elderly Person was not surprised to find himself with one foot pushed forward, his own shoulders thrown back and head raised up, while his arms wound themselves into an imitative and suggestive coil. And the eyes roamed far and wide in survey of the land so rich in beauty and substance. Together the tiny man and the great influence in concrete absorbed the silence and splendor of the summer night, the unspeakable beauty and brooding stillness of water, and sky, and forest, and yielding fields. The lights in the village far away twinkled cheerfully. Those in the nearby farms one by one disappeared. A faint call from a sleepy bird, and the echoing bark of a dog in the distance, and a whippoorwill industriously trying to break a record, were the only sounds left with the immovable figure standing like an unsleeping sentinel over his charge. There was no sense of loneliness in the posture, as the human creature reluctantly said his good night and moved away. If no spoken reply was heard a response was felt. Turning again for a glimpse, at a point which only an artist could have indicated as the one to secure a perfect silhouette, there was then seen perfectly the stalwart pride in the attitude and the glory that it felt in its place and purpose. It could guard, it would guard, and it was proud to guard. The Elderly Person saluted the influence, then turned and followed the path reluctantly through the woods and sought the house.

The entire conception and execution are something so rare that one can never be quite the same after he has seen and studied the figure and its many moods. It is big with vital appeal.

TWO SONGS

by

Eleanor Everest Freer

"To a Painter" (Waltz Song)

"When I Am Dead, My Dearest"

WITH ENGLISH AND GERMAN WORDS
Published by WILLIS MUSIC COMPANY
CINCINNATI, OHIO

These two songs show the Composer in sharp contrast as to moods and each proves her great worth as well as complete versatility. "To a Painter" is gay and brilliant to the final degree, while "When I Am Dead My Dearest," is a song of deep sentiment and expressiveness.

Mrs. Freer has had these songs printed with both English and German text, especially to please German Artists, many of whom have written her: "The music is beyond criticism but the songs are valueless to us without German words." The translations into the German are splendid and go to prove Mrs. Freer's idea that anything worth translating can be translated.

Invitation extended to all interested teachers.
This method has just been installed in the Stern Conservatory of Berlin.

Zimbalist endorses it in the following letter:

I cannot leave without expressing my entire satisfaction with the work I have accomplished in so short a time with your new apparatus for hand exercise and development. Although the time has been so limited the result in strengthening and invigorating the muscles, loosening the articulations, improving the circulation, etc., have more than fulfilled my greatest anticipations.

Your apparatus marks a new epoch in the pedagogy of the violin and piano and I consider both your method and your inventions as invaluable to the artist and indispensable for every player. My only regret is that you cannot provide me for my American Tour with one of the latest models which combines in one all your previous inventions for the left hand.

I assure you that I will gladly do all in my power to assist in every way such a great and scientific work, as yours.

The MacBurney Studios

Whatever else may transpire in the musical world, there is always certain to be something of interest on hand at the MacBurney Studios in the Fine Arts Building.

This grows, primarily, out of the fact that Mr. Thomas MacBurney, whose likeness is shown on the front page of Music News today, is not only a singer of distinction but that he also is a teacher whose methods have been productive of the very best results, and coupled with the fact that he knows how to develop the individual voices of his pupils to the best possible advantage there is the further certainty that he intends every MacBurney pupil to be intelligent as well as vocally proficient, and to this end he plans his studio work along broad lines.

Throughout the year the teaching goes on uninterruptedly here, and there is also a continuous list of programs which for sheer beauty and value have been equaled but seldom anywhere.

During the past year these programs have been weekly, and besides being the very desirable means to the end of satisfactory introduction of scores of young voices, they have also comprised lists of songs which are invaluable either in the preparation or in the hearing.

Many "evenings" have been devoted to special "schools" of singing and many more to definite "composers," and in this way the characteristics of practically all well known song writers have become as an open book to the MacBurney pupils while time and again an entire evening has been given to a composer who, but for the timely adoption by Mr. MacBurney and his absolutely fine studio assistant, Mr. William Lester, would have remained unknown in Chicago.

Mr. MacBurney has seen to it that in every one of these programs the quality of the vocal work has been exceptional and Mr. Lester has not only supplied fine accompaniments (occasionally giving way to Miss Grace Grove, another studio accompanist of splendid value), but he has also assisted materially at all times in evolving the inner thoughts and bringing out the hidden meanings in the content of the songs given.

Particularly agreeable and decidedly fine was the idea, carried out through a large part of the past summer of devoting many "evenings" to Chicago composers. The works thus adequately presented were numbered by the score and much of permanent and peculiar value was discovered.

Mr. MacBurney gave the last of the summer series of concerts late in August and is at present, with Mrs. MacBurney, enjoying a well-earned vacation from which he will return to begin his personal work on September 20.

Meantime the studios are open daily and the assistant teachers (of whom there are several and of whom Mr. MacBurney is justly proud) are busily engaged with that large class of pupils which declines to take any vacation whatever.

Shortly after the return of Mr. MacBurney the "evenings" at the studios will be resumed, and it is very certain that these will constitute a very important part of the coming musical season and will attract the same enthusiastic attention as in the past.

REGINA WATSON

A few weeks ago a little woman was laid away to eternal rest who never participated in the strife and contest which professional life usually engenders. She shunned downtown activity and scorned conventional channels of publicity. Her life's work was consummated amidst conditions which would ordinarily nullify all efforts. Within the confines of her own home and surrounded by the genial atmosphere which her own personality and artistry created, she met those who confided their musical destiny to her keeping and by example and irresistible enthusiasm brought out that which was best in each student.

Slight of stature, she possessed nervous force which might have been mistaken for brusqueness; in her love for the art divine she never wavered and kept abreast of the times and its ever changing idols and ideals with remarkable readiness. Her critical acumen was tempered by generous sympathy; she never trifled with her task and exacted corresponding devotion from others.

Mrs. Watson possessed the qualities of the great teacher: sincerity, knowledge and sympathy, and piloted many young pianists to success. Among the younger artists who have made name and fame for themselves by following her counsel are the Misses Scheib, Veronica Murphy Hays, Schramm, Goodrich, Roelle, Mrs. Fechheimer and the late Miss Allport.

An abler pen than mine has with loving sympathy written a beautiful appreciation of Mrs. Watson's rare personal traits in the Musical Courier. This slight tribute is simply intended to emphasize her work in the musical world, of which she was a most illustrious member. EMIL LIEBLING.

still. This was the setting for the first concert of the fourth annual festival of music given by the Edward MacDowell Festival Association.

Before the time of opening the concert, most of the seats were filled by an audience of distinguished appearance. Many there had motored to Peterborough from within a radius of fifty miles, and in it were representatives from most of the states east of the Mississippi. The program for this concert, devoted to the works of American composers was as follows:

Mrs. Monica Graham Stults, soprano; Mr. Reinald Werrenrath, baritone; Peterborough Choral Club. Boston Festival Orchestra, Mr. John W. Crowley, concertmaster; Conductors, Mr. Eusebius G. Hood, Mr. A. Cyril Graham, Mr. Stillman-Kelley, Miss Mabel W. Daniels, Mr. Henry F. Gilbert.

The program was appropriately opened by the beautiful "Legend" from the "Indian Suite" of MacDowell. It is music of the sunset, and of the pines—peculiarly suited to those surroundings, and received an impressive reading from the orchestra, under Mr. Hood. Mr. Graham's cantata proved to be a work of decided originality, and one making great demands upon the resources of soloists, chorus and orchestra. All gave of their best. The two movements from the "Aladdin" Suite of Stillman-Kelley, proved to be delightful music, spontaneous and witty; cleverly conceived, and effectively scored. It was splendidly played by the orchestra, under Mr. Kelley's skillful leadership. The setting by Miss Mabel Daniels, of the fine poem "The Desolate City," was decidedly interesting, and reflected great credit upon the creative ability of this attractive young woman. The orchestration is modern and effective, and in its presentation Miss Daniel, who conducted with spirit, was ably assisted by Mr. Werrenrath. Mrs. Stults' high, clear voice was heard to splendid advantage in the two songs by Cadman. It is an organ of great beauty, extensive range, and fine carrying power, and the singer has an unusually good stage presence. Well as she sang "The Land of the Sky Blue Water," her best work was done in "The Moon Drops Low." Henry F. Gilbert's negro rhapsody brought the concert to a brilliant close. Here is disclosed an unusual talent. This music sounds an original and individual note. It is virile, has nervous force, and withal is imaginitively poetic.

After an effective performance of the March from Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, Miss Milliken, a very beautiful young woman, and the possessor of a voice of good range and quality, that needs only the eradication of a disfiguring tremolo, to become an organ of decided beauty, sang the "Prayer" from "Tosca." Miss Bradford, the violinist, was heard to best advantage in her group of small pieces, and elicited much applause by her playing of the two MacDowell numbers. Following is a list of some of the works Mr. Kimbell has sung during the past season:

Oratorios—Messiah, Holy City, Stabat Mater, Creation, Elijah, St. Paul, The Seasons.

Cantatas—Redemption, Messe Solennelle, Rose Maiden, Crucifixion, Hymn of Praise, Swan and Skylark, Rebekah, Daughter of Jairus, Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.

Song Cycles—"Fairyland," "Flora's Holiday," "In a Persian Garden," "Morning of the Year," "The Golden Threshold," Four American Indian songs, "Alice in Wonderland," Tennyson's "Maud."

Operatic Arias—"Che gelida manina" (La Boheme); "Celeste Aida" (Aida); "Vesti la giubba," (Pagliacci); "None So Fair" (Martha); "Flower Song" (Carmen).

In costume—Second act "Martha;" "Sleeping Queen," Balfe; "Pinafore."

SOME PRESS COMMENT

"Messiah," Chicago

Mr. Kimbell at once created the impression that he sang with his heart as well as his voice. "Comfort Ye My People," the opening words of the oratorio, were conveyed to a breathless audience by a rich tenor voice of much power and sweetness. The heart interest which Mr. Kimbell evidenced in his work and in the pleasure of his listeners was noticeable to a gratifying degree.—Austinite.

"Swan and Skylark"

Mr. Kimbell's work was par excellence. He sang in a convincing manner the difficult solos in this cantata. His voice is a beautiful tenor of splendid range. Several times he sang high A and B flat with an ease that concealed the identity of these notes. Mr. Kimbell has temperament and displayed many novel effects in the work. His shading, accents and handling of tempos revealed the thought and study expended in mastering these intricacies. In short, it was a most artistic performance.—Record-Herald, Indianola, Iowa.

In Chautauqua

Mr. Kimbell seemed to be the prime favorite with the audience. He is possessed of a beautiful lyric tenor voice and sings with much dramatic power. His work was thoroughly enjoyed.—Tribune, Marysville, Ohio.

Gilbert, instead of by the composer, was so great a success with the audience, that a repetition was made necessary. The singing of Miss Marguerite Dunlap is entitled to more than passing mention. Hers is a mezzo-soprano voice of unusual richness and beauty. It is well schooled and under perfect control. She has a fine presence and an attractive personality, and her singing of her group of songs proved her to be a fine and intelligent artist.

Mr. Arthur Hackett replaced his brother, Charles, on all the programs. He possesses an excellent voice and his work proved him to be musicianly, as well as musical. In place of the songs by Lewis Isaacs, that his brother was to have sung, Mr. Hackett gave two by Cadman: "Moonlight" and "Far Off a Lover's Flute." Mr. Hood conducted all the numbers, with nice discrimination. All the numbers received much applause, but no encores were given.

audience. It has the further advantage of being set to a poem of unusual beauty. The work of the chorus—necessarily a small body of singers, recruited for the most part, from Peterborough—demonstrated the ability of Mr. Hood as a choral trainer and director. It was not only satisfactory work, it was satisfying—and could have been attained only by perseverance, and patience on the part of both chorus and director. All the soloists acquitted themselves splendidly, Mrs. Stults appearing to especially good advantage in the cantata.

However, her best work during the festival, and all her work was of a decidedly high order, and marked her as a singer of unusual gifts and ability, was done in her aria, "Elsa's Dream," at this concert. She gave this with fine feeling, lovely tone and with authority. Only in praise can one write of Mr. Werrenrath's voice and art. The former is of great natural beauty, and wide range, and the latter is governed by intelligence and good taste. Both in the Coleridge-Taylor work, and in his aria he made a profound impression, and he received, as was his due, hearty applause. Mr. Webster proved to be a 'cellist of skill and Miss Dunlap's work confirmed one in the good opinion already formed of her ability.

This proved to be the best made program of the festival, so far. Schubert's B minor Symphony was given an impressive reading and Mr. Werrenrath's fine singing of the Wagner number elicited protracted and well merited applause. To Harold Henry, however, belongs the greatest success of the festival. He played the D minor concerto of MacDowell in such big style, and with so much spirit, and such beauty of tone and finish that he aroused unusual enthusiasm in both audience and orchestra. The close of each movement was followed by long and spontaneous applause, and at the end of the concerto he received an ovation, which, those who have attended all the concerts since the first festival, say, was unprecedented in enthusiasm and duration.

Mr. Werrenrath's singing of the three MacDowell songs was work as beautiful as any that this fine artist has done. Mr. Farwell conducted his own work, after which Mr. Henry again demonstrated his fine and unusual powers. In this group his playing of the Brahms Intermezzo was particularly noteworthy, poetic and tonally beautiful and varied. After the Wagner-Liszt transcription, Mr. Henry received another ovation.

This concert, like that of the opening afternoon, was sung on the Pageant stage. Again the sun was setting and the air clear and still. The program and the scene were profoundly impressive, and the reverential performance of the former was quickly reflected in the mood of the audience, which was large and distinguished. The voices of soloists and chorus have been heard to no better advantage at any of the concerts than that of this afternoon. Every note carried to the furthest seat and lost nothing by being sung out of doors, so still was the air and so excellent a sounding board proved the pines. Some of the voices seemed to take on an added beauty. This was particularly true of Mr. Hackett's, whose work both in the Oratorio and Mendelssohn's number, was highly satisfying. In fact he did this afternoon, some of the best singing that has been heard at the festival. The music of the Indian Suite, of which three movements were played at this concert (only the Legend was given on Thursday) seemed almost overpoweringly impressive in these surroundings.

Primarily to the untiring and unselfish efforts of Mrs. MacDowell is due the success of the undertaking of which these music festivals are only one, and a comparatively unimportant manifestation. The devotion to her cause exhibited by this remarkable woman, who works unceasingly, despite almost unsurmountable physical handicaps is the inspiration of all who come under her influence. Her cause, the cause of the Edward MacDowell Memorial Association, is the cause of all throughout this great country, who are working for the growth and development of the creative arts in America.

North Shore School of Music

Broadway and Leland Avenue

The North Shore School of Music is an institution in which music is taught in all its branches, and, offers complete courses in Acting and Dramatic Art, as well as in the various branches of the Art of Dancing.

THE PAST YEAR

During the past year the school has enjoyed unprecedented growth in all departments. In the regular courses the classes have grown, as well as in the private teaching. The Violin department developed remarkably and promises to be one of the strongest in the school. Under the able direction of Miss Louise Noyes, who will continue in charge of the work, the department of dancing registered large classes during this, its first season.

Many faculty and student recitals have been given during the year. The following members of the faculty have given, or appeared on, programs: Myrtle Hatswell-Bowman, Minnie Cedargreen, Electa Austin, Louise Marie Boche, Alice Emmons-McBride, George Dasch, Lemuel W. Kilby, Lester Alden and Charles J. Haake.

THE COMING YEAR

All plans are for the greatest efficiency and activity in the several departments. A number of additions to the faculty have been made in anticipation of the year's demands. In addition to programs, similar to those of past seasons, it is planned to give a series of three concerts by the North Shore String Quartet. This organization, which will henceforth be affiliated with the school, is composed of the following well known men, all members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra: George Dasch, first violin; Hjalmar Rabe, second violin; Otto Roehrborn, viola; Carl Brueckner, violoncello. In order to add to the interest of the programs, a soloist will appear in each concert.

It is with pleasure that we announce the addition to the faculty, in the voice department, of Mary Ann Kaufman. Miss Kaufman has had a varied professional experience, as singer and teacher. She holds an important position as soprano in the Oak Park Congregational Church, and those who attended the North Shore Festival concerts in Evanston last May will recall her beautiful work as soprano soloist in Pierne's "Children's Crusade."

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra

No more striking or conspicuous illustration of the wonderful development of music in America can be found than is offered by the building up in Minneapolis, the metropolis of the northwest, of a symphony orchestra ranked by leading musicians and critics as one of the foremost in the country. Emil Oberhoffer has been the conductor of the orchestra from its beginning, and has had the loyal and liberal support of the people of Minneapolis in building up the orchestra to its remarkably high plane of excellence. It has eighty players, gathered from the musical centers of the world, all under regular salaries, and rehearsals are held daily.

The orchestra is now in its eleventh year and is maintained by a guaranty fund of $65,000 per year.

The season of 1912-1913 was a notable one, with a record of 189 concerts given during a period of thirty-two weeks, divided as follows: The home season of twenty-three weeks, with twelve symphony. twenty-one popular, six young people's and thirty-seven out-of-town concerts, the latter including the nineteen concerts of the second annual eastern tour when the orchestra appeared in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Columbus, Louisville, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Peoria, etc. Then a spring tour of nine weeks, beginning April 6 and ending June 7, during which the orchestra played one hundred and nine concerts in fifty-two cities in thirteen states and the province of Manitoba, covering a territory extending from Winnipeg on the north, to Tulsa, Okla., on the south, and from Akron, O., on the east to Wichita, Kans., on the west.

The eleventh season, 1913-1914, which opens October 24, will extend over a similar period as the preceding season, and will present the same number of concerts. The success of the eastern tour brought such a great number of offers of return dates in addition to other cities expressing the desire to hear the orchestra that manager Wendell Heighton has arranged for the third annual eastern tour, to open Saturday, February 21, at Milwaukee, with Harold Bauer as soloist. Among the cities to be visited are *New York, Brooklyn, *Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, *Ithaca, *Aurora, *Pittsburgh, *Cleveland, *Columbus, Dayton, Oberlin, *Detroit, Ypsilanti and Chicago.

(* indicates return engagements.)

Following are the dates and soloists for the twelve Friday symphony concerts of the home season: October 24, Putnam Griswold, baritone; November 7, Richard Czerwonky, violinist, concertmaster of the orchestra; November 21, Katherine Goodson, pianist; December 5, Johanna Gadski, Wagnerian soprano; December 19, Cornelius Van Vliet, solo 'cellist of the orchestra; January 2, Eugene Ysaye, violinist; January 16, Julia Claussen, contralto; January 30, Fritz Kreisler, violinist; February 13, Teresa Carreno, pianist; February 20, Harold Bauer, pianist; March 13, Mischa Elman, violinist; March 27, Emma Loeffler, dramatic soprano.

The twenty-one Sunday popular concerts are divided into three series of seven concerts each, the soloists for the first series being Lucille Stevenson, soprano; Carl Uterhart, violinist; William Hinshaw, baritone; Georgia Kober, pianist; Elsa Kellner, soprano; Henry J. Williams, harpist of the orchestra, and Albert Lindquest, tenor.

The eighth annual spring tour will open early in April and extend over a period of nine weeks.

Mr. Oberhoffer is in Europe at present preparing his programs and promises some interesting novelties. He announces his return for October 1 and will start the orchestra rehearsals shortly thereafter. The orchestra will be greatly improved this season through several important changes, especially among the woodwinds. Contracts have been signed for a new first oboe, first and second clarinet, piccolo, second bassoon, first and fourth French horn. Concertmaster Czerwonky and solo 'cellist Van Vliet, will again be at their accustomed places, the only important addition to the string section being the engagement of a new first bass player and a second 'cellist to replace Karl Kirk Smith, who has gone abroad to study.

FREDERICK PRESTON SEARCH

So great was the enthusiasm over the wonderful 'cello playing of Frederick Preston Search in the sixty cities of recital appearances on his flying tour in this country last season, and so many have been the recall engagements, that this talented young artist has changed his plans so as to be in America again this season and will cross the continent. in his engagements, four times between October and April. He is to open the Boise (Idaho) Artists' Course in the Pinney Opera House, on October 6, and then goes to the Pacific Coast where he was so enthusiastically received last winter. After the holidays he is to be heard in the east.

No 'cellist appearing in America has been the recipient of more complimentary press notices and eminent commendations than Frederick Preston Search on his last season's western trip. The following excerpts, taken from hundreds of glowing reports, tell a story of remarkable favor:

President Frank L. McVey, State University of North Dakota.—Frederick Preston Search made an excellent impression upon his audience and they were highly pleased with his work and interpretation.

Professor Herbert Kimbrough, Dean of College of Music, State College of Washington,—Frederick Preston Search is richly endowed with all the qualities that go to make a great artist. He possesses temperament, a beautiful tone and a technic so great that the difficulties of his instrument are not apparent to the listeners. His playing has a magnetic quality that is rare. In his hands the violoncello may be heard at its best.

Ex-Governor Alva Adams, Colorado.—The only unhappy people in Pueblo today are those who did not attend the Search recital. It was a wonderful triumph.

Dean H. C. Minnich, State University, Oxford, Ohio.—Frederick Preston Search gave us a very delightful entertainment. He plays with remarkable musicianship and superb technic. I have never elsewhere listened to music where the instrument responded to the touch of an artist with such perfectly true tones.

Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.—The talented young 'cellist played a wonderful program of glorious music, holding his audience enthralled by his matchless tone and magnificent technic.

Grinnell (Iowa) Register.—Is master of a pure, powerful tone, and plays with emotional and intellectual expression.

San Francisco Sierra News.—A musician of wonderful power.

Aberdeen (S. D.) Daily News.—The sweet tones of his 'cello thrilled every one.

Grand Junction (Colo.) Daily News.—His concert was an inspiration from the opening number until the last note had been uttered by the lute-like strings of his instrument.

Salt Lake Republican.—In arrangement, technic and interpretation his program was unsurpassingly fine.

Pocatello (Idaho) Tribune.—The finest musical event ever given in Pocatello.

Portland Oregonian.—The purity of his tones and the sympathetic renditions of his work were revelations.

Riverside (Cal.) Daily Press.—Astounded his listeners. .. . The work of this artist in all climaxes produces, in the minds of his audience, a feeling of great reserve power.

Pueblo (Colo.) Star Journal.—After the wealth of melody in the slow movement (Grieg Sonata) the audience for a time sat spell-bound, and then burst into tremendous applause.

Reno (Nevada) Evening Gazette—It must be remembered that this wonderful player is only twenty-three years old and the enthusiastic audience of last evening can readily figure out what a brilliant future this young genius has before him.

Knoxville (Tenn.) Daily Sentinel.—Summing up the recital, it may be justly called a most unique concert and the finest 'cello recital heard here in years.

With such tributes as these, all couched in the most superlative language, it is not strange that many critics have spontaneously spoken of Frederick Preston Search as the "'cellist wonder." (Advertisement.)

CROSBY ADAMS

Mr. and Mrs. Crosby Adams of Chicago have had an unusually busy summer. In July they conducted a teachers' class in Kansas City, where they resided between 1887 and 1891. Here they not only welcomed new teachers and formed new friendships, but renewed old acquaintances also. They were very much impressed with this western city, so beautified by the park system, the natural formation of the city with its cliffs and limestone formation lending a unique touch to the art of the landscape gardens. Musically the city has also kept pace with itself.

Returning to Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Adams held in the Fine Arts Building in August their annual summer class for teachers of the piano. This class brought together teachers from many different sections of the country as far east as Washington, D. C., west as Montana, north as Minnesota, and south as Alabama. The teachers were responsive and enthusiastic.

Mrs. Adams is widely known, not only for her compositions, but as a teacher. She has studied deeply into the literature of music for teaching purposes and has become a recognized authority as a teacher of teachers. The Adamses are devoting more and more time each year to these classes.

At the close of the Chicago class these educators left for the Blue Ridge Mountains, not only for a well-earned holiday, but to settle permanently at Montreat, N. C., a lovely spot about sixteen miles from Asheville. Their cottage at Montreat will be a musical center, as they will hold a midwinter class for teachers in their home. They will also come to Chicago each summer for a session.

JOHN NICHOLS

John W. Nichols, the well known vocal teacher and singer, will reopen his studio at 330 West Fifty-eighth street, New York City, next week, where a large class of enthusiastic pupils awaits his return. Two years of experience in teaching voice culture to a class at Columbia University, New York City, has convinced Mr. Nichols that a great deal of good can be accomplished in that way which would otherwise be left undone. There are many young singers with a great deal of natural talent who cannot afford private lessons but are enabled to study in a class where the expense is divided. There are times in teaching when explanations that are generally made to one pupil can be given to any number at the same time, thus economizing the time of students and teacher. Also listening to each others' lessons greatly benefits by making apparent the value of various exercises. Most of the time in class, however, is given to individual instruction, which Mr. Nichols believes is absolutely necessary in every case. This season Mr. Nichols will conduct a class of this sort which will meet twice a week in his own private studio. The plan upon which Mr. Nichols works makes it possible for a beginner or one advanced in vocal art to work in the same class, and one may enter at any time and their individual needs will be attended to.

Musical Journalism

By CHARLES E. WATT

The following paper, read by Charles E. Watt at the convention of the N. A. O. at Ocean Grove in August has created much comment and a wide demand for the issue of Music News. in which it has already been printed.

As that issue is entirely exhausted the article is reproduced by very general request:

Why should an organists' convention be interested in the matters pertaining to Music Journalism? That is the question you are asking, and it is the question I put to myself when the subject was given to me for discussion.

There is only one answer, and that is: Reciprocity. The organists' convention, and every other convention or club of musicians, as well as the musicians as individuals, should be interested in the music papers, because the music papers are interested in them and have done and are doing a great deal to make conventions profitable, inasmuch as the reports of these conventions, published in the music newspapers, reach many thousands who cannot attend the convention itself, and if the reports are well done they can influence the public thought even more than does the actual meeting.

Since the interest, therefore, is mutual—or, at least, since it should be mutual—I propose in the little I shall have to say to be very frank and to do what I can to remove some of the antagonism which unfortunately exists between various members of the music profession and the music newspapers; for the two factors should be absolutely in accord. Each can help the other mightily, and in fact each is absolutely dependent, in many ways, on the other.

When a superior officer once found two lesser officers in the army quarreling with each other, he rebuked them as follows: "Don't be so foolish as to waste your time and energy antagonizing each other; save your strength and ammunition for the common enemy."

The general public cannot be called, honestly, the enemy of either the professional musician or the music newspaper, but it, at least, is often very apathetic in its appreciation and support of the musician, and the paper can be, and is, as a matter of fact, very useful, indeed, in helping to do away with that old-time apathy and to establish the musical profession on an absolutely strong basis.

Mr. Freund, the editor of Musical America, has recently in interviews stated some very astonishing facts in regard to the general musical situation in this country, and while he has not particularly named the Music Newspaper as one of the most important factors in this development, he might very honestly have done so; and now that the Larger American Musical Life is so well under way it is worth while to consider the American Music Weekly and see what help it may be in the future, and perhaps suggest some things which it should not be, at the same time. No one can deny that up to date it has been as potent a factor as any in bringing the musical status of America up to its present satisfactory standpoint, and, that being true, there is no reason to suspect that in the future it will not be even more active in doing good work.

There are just four Weekly Music Papers in the United States, not counting one on the Pacific Coast, which is almost wholly local to San Francisco and the influence of which is not appreciable east of Denver, and while it is not possible nor would it be profitable to make any comparisons or show forth any differences in these four weeklies, it is nevertheless possible to state some general facts and deduct some general conclusions.

The first fact is this: The papers themselves are splendid examples of business enterprise. Few people indeed understand the cost of production of any newspaper and still fewer know that when the paper is devoted to a specialty, and may, in fact, in a sense be called a Trade Paper—it has but a limited field from which to draw sustenance. The especial duties of a music newspaper, entailing not only the ordinary newsgathering and the publicity work so well known in all newspaper offices but demanding also the constant attendance at music events and the reporting of functions at all times of the year and in all parts of the country, are arduous indeed.

In spite of these special difficulties the Music Weekly has attained a business success which is phenomenal and it is only necessary to compare any one of the American music papers with any of those published in Europe, some of which are extremely old, to see that the American music paper, like most other things American, is vastly superior to the European article, both in make-up and in content, but very especially in make-up. This entails, of course, the fact that the publishing of the American Music Newspaper is an expensive proposition and must therefore find liberal support from some source—the only logical source being the Professional Musicians, the question at once arises, is this support an essential thing and should it be continued in the future as in the past?

This question is particularly in place just at present because of the fact that many state conventions of the past two years have discussed it with much heat, and very much that is derogatory of the newspaper—mostly fiction, however—has been made public at these meetings.

In the Illinois Convention of Teachers last year, for instance, the music papers were excluded from all business meetings and there was a very general discussion as to the advisability of cutting loose from the so-called "thralldom" of this press and the establishment of newer ways in which to gain "Publicity."

Also, many individuals, especially among the lesser managers, have advocated right and left the entire abolition of the Weekly Music Paper and have given, in print and otherwise, some very astonishing reasons for this attitude and have proposed an endless list of new ways to advertise, most of which have promptly fallen to the ground.

In Chicago especially the agitation has been severe and very much foolish talk on the subject of Music Papers has been indulged in.

Now, there are several special phases of the matter which I want to touch upon as briefly as possible.

To again quote Mr. Freund: An editorial in Musical America some months ago very carefully and very exactly explained the reasons why the Professional Musicians ought to advertise in the Musical Weeklies and also showed convincingly that the support of the paper must come from that source.

Many musicians think that in subscribing for a music paper they are really helping to support it. In a very limited way they really are, but as Mr. Freund stated, there is ABSOLUTELY NO PROFIT IN ANY MAGAZINE except from the advertisements it carries. The subscription list might be multiplied to infinity, and yet all the money taken in from that source would be swallowed up in the cost of production of the paper itself—this is absolutely true of the American music newspaper especially—for it is produced royally and the cost is terrific.

. . . . . .

To be successful, the Musician must be Broad Minded. He must know all about every development of his own art especially. The piano teacher who knows only piano technic and repertoire, the singer who knows only vocal art or the organist who scorns the other branches of music development will reach no high plane in his work. This is so self-evident that it is unnecessary to offer any argument whatever.

What way so quick to gain this general knowledge as from the music weeklies—papers which have time to digest the situation and which are local to no one division of the country.

All musicians should, therefore, be readers of the four papers published in this country. Prohibitive in cost, you say? All four of them by subscription cost only $11.50 per year—less than one dollar a month—less than 25 cents a week for the lot!

And, even if you haven't time to read them all, think of the great mass of information they would bring you each week from which you could read what pleased you best!

Or, if four seems preposterous to you, then you should certainly be a regular subscriber for one New York paper and one published in Chicago. I have no hesitation in making this statement, for, as I have said above, it is not a matter of profit to the papers half so much as it is a question of advantage to the professional musicians, and if the papers were subscribed for and actually read more fully than now, very much of false impression would shortly disappear and the reasons why the musicians should advertise more freely in the music papers would become more clearly apparent.

An editorial prepared some little time ago had for its caption "The Three P's" and though this article was more or less kindergarten as to content and style, it yet created so much comment at the time that it will not be improper, perhaps, to recapitulate its main points here.

The three P's are Preparedness, Personality and Publicity—all of these being absolutely essential to the public musician.

No stress need be laid now on the fact that it is foolish to enter the public arena today without Preparedness—in fact, it is not necessary, for the many millions of dollars spent in music study, the purchase of instruments, etc., are eloquent proof that we have reached, in America, a satisfactory status on that point.

That Personality is very important also is generally conceded, and, if graces of mind and body are not in evidence naturally and cannot be cultivated by the would-be musician, he might as well abandon his career at the beginning, for, lacking grace, charm and adaptability, he will arrive nowhere.

Publicity, however, the really greatest factor of the three, is not so well understood, nor is it considered from any sensible or practical standpoint by the vast majority of musicians. It is only he, however, who does study it and apply its best known axioms who really becomes "great" in the estimation of the world.

A great many musicians have a lurking inner consciousness that they are really very superior people and that their musical gifts and accomplishments should bring them the best there is in the world as a matter of course. These musicians think that publicity is theirs by divine right and that the public press is maintained for their benefit.

In the early days of any community the local newspapers exist in a very hap-hazard way of course and are more than glad to grasp every opportunity to make their columns readable. The musician of the small community is a more or less notable person and he has no difficulty in getting publicity in his local press for nothing. But, as the city grows, this becomes more and more difficult until in the large cities it is in time, impossible.

Twenty-five years ago a new music school in Chicago could have almost unlimited attention from the daily press, but today, when there are perhaps fifty important schools of music and the volume of teaching has grown so enormous that it is actually one of the great commercial assets of the city, the daily press has grown positively indifferent from any other than the purely advertising standpoint, and it is a literal impossibility to get publicity now from the daily press except through pull of some sort or by payment more or less direct.

Unquestionably the same conditions are true in every large city.

It follows inevitably then, that since the daily press is interested only in foreign notables, being absolutely gullible in that direction and giving thousands of dollars' worth of free publicity in a given case if sufficiently beguiled by the manager's manipulations; the American music-maker and teacher must look to his own class of paper for his Publicity —the thing which he must have and which he must, in some way, pay for.

It is scarcely possible to find a well established musician in any line but that thinks he could very easily edit a Music Paper, and he is therefore full of ideas as to the way it should be run. As a matter of fact, there are hundreds of executive musicians in America who could actually do the editorial work of a music paper with entire satisfaction, but the question of making the paper pay is an entirely different one, and it is just on this rock that all the discussion begins and where the division of opinion between professional musician and the music paper occurs.

The musician thinks and says that the paper ought to be educational and altruistic first of all. The publisher KNOWS that it must be commercial first of all and that the other factors must be taken care of in just proportion only.

And it seems to me much of the discussion and the bad feeling which has at any time been apparent has grown out of a lack of frankness on the part of the music papers and the fact that they have tried often to make it seem that they believed musicians to be wholly right in unreasonable demands, while at the same time they were endeavoring in round-about ways to secure the support without which they could not exist.

To put the matter quite plainly then, since the music paper is a commercial proposition and must of necessity be such, the only question between the professional musician and the paper should be one of adequate service for reasonable pay.

Startling as this statement may sound, it does not at all entail the fact that the opinions or the plans of any music paper are or need be for sale. On the contrary, the paper absolutely must have editorial writers who have opinions which they are not afraid to state, and it must have reviewers who will give honest statements of fact. But all the editorial matter should be selected with a view to dealing with generalities instead of with personalities, and all review of public work should be constructive rather than destructive. It is not necessary to print harsh comment on public work at any time, and this should apply to advertisers as well as non-advertisers of the paper.

But, after all, the real question which will be asked and which is even now being discussed everywhere is this: Must one advertise in order to receive any attention at all?

The question is purely one of editorial choice. The editor is absolutely within his rights in the choosing of the subjects he treats and can, with perfect propriety, ignore any thing he chooses. It is the rule of all newspaperdom. The really sensational thing must perforce receive some attention, but all the medium events and the smaller things are sifted over and chosen from according to the ideas of the editorial department, and in a music paper, for instance, if it becomes a question of sending the last available reporter to the function of an advertiser or of one offered by a non-advertiser, common sense will of course decide in favor of the former.

In other words, the music paper is under a distinct obligation to its advertisers and is under no more than the ordinary obligation to any others. From the Altruistic or the Educational side the paper has just as much right to choose its course as has any individual musician.

Purely commercial, you say? Well, let us see! You may walk on State street in Chicago, or Broadway in New York and admire the goods displayed in the store windows, but if you really want to wear these goods you must go in the store and pay real money for them. It makes no difference whether you are "talented" or "doing art work" or whether you are absolutely without funds or not—if you want the Broadway or State street goods you must find money to pay for them. And so, if the publicity offered by the music papers is good you should be willing to pay for it.

It is not, however, all of it good. I make no pretense of saying that all that has ever been done by any American music paper has been good—nor do I claim that the charges for services made by some of these papers are legitimate.

But, it is your prerogative to examine all State street or Broadway goods before you buy them, and so it is equally your privilege to study the subject of advertising in the music papers and buy only that which is reasonable and which seems to you fully worth the money asked for it.

And if the musicians of America will adopt a high grade moral way of dealing with the music newspapers and will demand a high grade moral policy in return, they will get it very speedily. The musician must not expect or exact SOMETHING for NOTHING, and the music paper on its part must be liberal, educational and altruistic as well as commercial.

What, then, would be the ideal condition? Unquestionably one in which the professional musician recognized the fact that he needs the help and the publicity of a certain number of music papers (four hardly seems too many, but possibly a fewer number would suffice) and that he will support them adequately in order that they may be enabled to do their work from a high grade standpoint without question as to the advisability of adopting any other.

In other words, the musician should advertise as freely as he thinks he can consistently afford, and in looking at the money expenditure he must be at least as altruistic as he expects the paper to be. He must not everlastingly look for the DIRECT RESULT of advertising, but he must remember that publicity is the breath of life to him and that if the music paper gives it to him freely and honestly, he must in turn yield his support freely and honestly by way of advertising in that paper. Very often musicians say, "I do not want any press notice at all unless it comes to me absolutely spontaneously. If I pay anything for it directly or indirectly, it loses its entire value."

If publicity is a commodity, a necessary commodity for the musician, why should it be valueless because paid for? A dress or a coat must be paid for just in proportion to its quality, but does that rob it of value? It may be perfectly honest of material and in make-up, and it may have involved the real artistry of a designer, yet all this is paid for when you buy it, and the material is none the less good therefore, nor is the artistry dimmed one iota because dollars have been exchanged for it.

If musicians were themselves absolutely non-commercial in their dealings with the public, they might more readily and consistently accuse the music papers of being otherwise. But to come down to facts. All professional musicians are such—first because of inclination and also because they are very glad to do much for the cause itself—but also, as the first flush of youth passes, each public musician finds more and more that his art is also his commercial asset, and he sells it by the hour or the day exactly as he sometimes accuses the paper of selling itself by the column or page.

The plain truth is this: The musician must have food, clothing, shelter, relaxation and various other essentials to life—these he must pay for in proportion as he patronizes those who keep them in stock to sell—but he also, if he would get very far along in his work, must have PUBLICITY, and he should, therefore, apportion his expenditures in such way that a part of his income is left for publicity getting. The music paper is not the only factor on which this appropriation should be expended but unquestionably, today, it is the chief one.

But, once the musician has attained a proper attitude of mind toward this problem the music paper must seek to meet this with like honesty of purpose. Not only high grade Editorial and Reportorial work should be provided and as reasonable prices for advertisement as are at all consistent with the publication of the paper should be adopted, but also, as a mutual protection, the papers should utterly repudiate any methods which could bring discredit to them and in doing this should be particularly careful to avoid the "I am holier than thou" attitude—each one, first of all striving for a high ideal and hoping that the others will also strive for the same thing and that the Music Public, honestly and freely appreciating this, will make all other methods as undesirable as they should be unprofitable.

IT has become quite the habit in Chicago, when any musical address is wanted, to say "Look in the classified Directory Card columns of the Music News, and you will surely find it."

The habit is growing in other localities too.

This is not without its good and sufficient reason either, for while the cost of this service is only twelve dollars a year (including subscription) the advantages gained are very material. Not only do prospective managers and pupils use this list continually to find the addresses of artists and teachers, but also, church people often find it of service in locating desired organists, directors and singers, and further—the complete list is used habitually by all sorts of advertisers who want to send announcements of new and novel productions to a representative list of musicians.

Music in Paris

CHARLES W. CLARK SPENDS SUMMER IN PARIS

Charles W. Clark, the celebrated baritone, has been forced to give up all idea of a vacation this summer, although his plans were to rest during August and September to prepare for the most extended tour of America that he has as yet undertaken. But the arrival of numerous artists, who had heard that Mr. Clark was to be in the concert field during the entire winter and spring in America with small chance for many lessons during that busy time, have made vacation for the moment out of the question. He will teach at his Paris studio up to the first week of October. During October he will simply "relax, rest, read" and motor, until he takes passage, reaching the United States on November 3 to begin the most extensive engagement in the artist's career. Agents from all over the country are writing to Mr. Clark's representatives, The Redpath Musical Bureau, for more time and the concert tour, which was to have included eighty concerts will perhaps double the amount.

Mr. Clark says, "It is a great pleasure to work with such a splendid body of singers as those with whom it has been my good fortune to associate. The combination of good voices with good brains is one that spurs a teacher to his best efforts. I am looking forward to my concert tour in America this year with great interest. It is always a joy to get home, and I would rather sing to the American public than any other in the world; however, when I have such an unusual number of artists as I have this summer, I believe that I enjoy teaching almost as much as I do appearing before the public."

Miss Amanda Shuls, who has been studying in Paris for the past year with Charles W. Clark, gave an afternoon musicale to a number of her friends at her apartment, rue Faraday, last Tuesday. She possesses a rich, warm voice of remarkable range with a control that enables her to portray the emotional and poetic in an intellectual manner that satisfies the most critical. She built a splendid foundation before coming to Paris, with Karleton Hackett and Mr. Charles W. Clark, with whom she has studied while here, predicts a brilliant future for her. She will return to America sometime this fall to enter upon her professional career.

A big triumph for the celebrated baritone has been the work he has done with the beautiful voice of his brother, Dr. Frederick Clark, a well known physician from Chicago. He came over for some research work in the hospitals and laboratories of Paris, while acting as Charles W. Clark's personal representative and manager, and also studying voice with his brother. Dr. Clark has made such remarkable progress, and has shown such a decided fitness for the work, that under the influence and advice of the big singer, he is devoting all his time to voice work, and will return to Chicago in the fall and open a vocal studio. His great success as soloist at a concert given in Paris a short time ago and when he gave a number of songs, shows what an artist he is, and what wonderful work Charles W. Clark can get out of his pupils.

Charles W. Clark Will Teach in Chicago in December

Charles W. Clark has just announced that owing to the numerous requests he has had from many artists in the United States, he has been able to make arrangements with the Redpath Musical Bureau to devote the month of December and first week in January to giving lessons. Many are now booking the lessons, as the time will be so limited and many who wish to take the opportunity of profiting by the great singer's knowledge without having to cross the water, will take advantage of the holiday season to go to Chicago during the vacation.

Madame Kathleen Vierke Sings at the Deauville (France) Casino

Madame Kathleen Vierke, the charming singer, whose concert last April was such a brilliant success, has just had another triumph in singing with orchestra at the fashionable watering place, Deauville, France. She gave the following numbers: "Air de Serse," Handel, "Der Tod und das Maedchen" by Schubert, "Still Wie Die Nacht" by Bohm, and "A Spirit Flower" by Campbell-Tipton. M. Louis Masson conducted the orchestra. The large and fash-

She is an earnest musician, and her stage appearance is unusually beautiful. She is now in England for a short holiday with her husband, Mr. C. P. Vierke, the well known writer.

Bessie Talbot Salmon, Concert Soprano

Very interesting news comes from Bessie Talbot Salmon, the young singer who was so popular during her several years' residence in Paris. A most attractive prospectus, with a full-length photograph, has just reached us, outlining her work as a concert soprano and a teacher. Since her return to Boston in May, she has been singing a great deal for managers and professional musicians, and has been warmly welcomed to her native city. She began to teach two weeks after landing in America, and she will keep her studio open while filling numerous concert and church engagements. Miss Salmon makes an ideal concert singer, the charm of her personality, her beautiful voice and marked musicianship, more than fit her for the success that will be hers.

Thuel Burnham's Summer Recitals

Thuel Burnham has been kept hard at work all summer with her pupils and during August when almost every one else is out of town he is still busy with the musicians who have come from America to work with him. His Sunday recitals have been most successful, in fact every time I hear him I seem to have discovered him anew. His tone, so beautiful, so crystalline, so vibrant, makes his virtuoso a thing of delight, and his interpretations are full of genius.

I had the pleasure of being present at some lessons in his studio. One was to Miss Kruger of Kansas City, who gave a most interesting recital a short time ago in the studios. She is a most earnest musician, and gives promise of wonderful development. Seated at one of the grand pianos, the master at the other, she gave some preludes of Chopin, with criticisms and suggestions from Burnham, who frequently would illustrate the passage at his piano, sending out his wonderful tone and still more wonderful powers of expression in a way to quickly convince the young pianist. No one has any idea of the work put into any really artistic interpretation of a composition, until he has been behind the scenes and heard the polishing, the rounding off, the drawing the parts together in a well balanced whole, the shading and coloring of one part into another, the preparing for a climax, and the softening into the next ideas. Miss Kruger showed great concentration and readily and intelligently grasped the modifications. She then gave a novelette of Schumann and one or two other things, no notes being of course used by the pupil. The hour was then over, and an artist pupil, Mrs. John MacArthur, president of the Thursday Musical Club of New York City, brought Dvorak's Quintet, for piano and strings, to read through. This is to be played by her with the Kneisel quartet in New York next season. It is a wonderful composition, but very difficult, and I was amazed by the way in which the reading took place, and the technical difficulties overcome at the same time that musical ideas were interpreted and contrasted. Of course, Mrs. MacArthur is a well known musician, but the reading of such a serious composition is a task for any one. Mrs. MacArthur then gave several Schumann numbers, with some splendid pedaling and large tone work, two of Burnham's specialties. It is an interesting thing to see two artists working together, and the French word for such work, "conseils," or advice, is an apt way to put it. Mrs. MacArthur has just taken a villa at Dinard on the coast of France for August. Her Friday musical evenings during the months of June and July have been brilliant and most delightful affairs.
